PARAGRAPHS

Fear as often evidenced by our electors is considered natural by some people in dictatorial positions, but as students we would have strong reasons to be of a different opinion.

The hope has been avoided that before the exhilaration of graduation would reach to be effected advantageously, by the choosing an alternation which cannot, relatively to the standpoint of initiative, interest and ability.

May I suggest the necessity of capable leadership and persuade those who hold to the idea that this college is merely a factory, to disregard all preconceived notions and work forward in an attempt to create among the students an interest in the activities of the college.

Choosing a Leader

Each year it seems to be the case that the Eleventh is the year when the elections, as such, are given little opportunity for being looked into, and are thereby considered of less importance.

Our attention is turned to many activities, which are essential to the progress of the periodical. We are interested in all the happenings of the school, but are unable to give the time to any one activity.

In all elections we should direct our influence to the election of that candidate whom we deem best fitted to master the duties and responsibilities which are essential to the progress and expansion of any college.

Our attention is turned for a moment away from the election, and we ask: "What does all this mean?"

How Are You?

Spring is here, and just how are you? Well, in the short range of the near future, our course of study will be altered, and it is likely that you will be more interested in the activities of the college than you have been for some time. Our minds are of course filled with thoughts of the work and the play of the coming season.

The College Library

According to tradition, the college library is the nerve center of the college. It is the place where we go to get that which we lack, or to regain what we have lost. It is the place where we go to find information, to refresh our memories, and to stimulate our imaginations.

But, as with all things, the library must have its rules and regulations, and we must abide by them if we are to enjoy its benefits.

The Poet's Corner

I know a girl, her name I will not tell
Whose eyes are as dark as the nights
And whose thoughts are filled with dreams of love
She is the girl that I love

But if we don't have it when it's time,
I often wonder, time after time,
How can I love her in the midst of pain?

To me she will always my one desire
Her hair shines with lustre, so like the moon

And if thou wilt, forget.

No. 17, From the Juniors

By C. R. Cortland and L. L. Minton, '35

Senior classes may come and senior classes may go, but whilst always remember the senior class of '34. Possessed of a mental knowledge which serves us as far back as the year of 1930, we are now being rewarded for their patient diligence by reaping the benefit of their labors. We are now stepping out into the world to conquer their tasks, whether great or small.

The greatness is that to be achieved by the seniors is hoped to equal all other chances that have gone on before. Following in your footsteps we, the members of the Junior class, respect and appreciate the high standard set by you; we will live up to your standard, if not exceed it.

From you we find that "Success is sweet, but the key to success is hard work."

From the Freshmen

By F. K. Lucas

The self-same breezes blow;

While the set of the sail, and not the ship,

That determines the "way you go."

"Some ships sail east; some sail west,

And ways; and the high, and the low;

To every man there openeth

The highways, but... a low..."
