A&T College Will Celebrate 73rd Anniversary

Various Events Are Scheduled For Homecoming

A full program of activity has been arranged for the observance of annual homecoming at A&T College this weekend.

Jimmie I. Barber, dean of men and chairman of the observance committee, said the four-day program begins on Thursday evening, October 29, and concludes on Sunday, November 1.

The annual coronation exercises, set for Thursday evening at the Moore Gymnasium, sets in motion the big celebration. The opening event will feature the crowning of "Miss A&T," the attractive Miss Allegray Wilder of Belhaven, amid the pomp and ceremony usually attached to such affairs. The affair is to be held in the Charles Moore Gymnasium beginning at 8:00 o'clock.

The Friday program lists a mock funeral for the Morgan State College Bears, in the Holland Hall Bowl, beginning at 6:30 P.M., and a giant pep-rally, bonfire and frankfurter roast at the athletic field beginning at 7:00.

The Saturday events include: a pre-dawn dance, all-alumni breakfast, a luncheon for alumni officials, hosted by Dr. and Mrs. Lewis C. Dowdy, the annual Homecoming Parade which moves to Memorial Stadium beginning at 11:00 A.M., a pregame show at 12:30 P.M., the football game — the A&T College Aggies versus the Morgan State College Bears, kickoff at 1:30 P.M., and that evening, the annual homecoming ball. The latter affair, set for the Moore Gym, will feature the music of Lionel Hampton and his orchestra.

Homecoming activities conclude with the annual Alumni Worship Service on Sunday morning beginning at 11:00 o'clock. Reverend W. J. Toomer, pastor of the Danville, Va., Camp Grove Baptist Church and an alumnus of the college, will deliver the sermon.

Barber said a record turnout of alumni is expected for the event.

November Dates Are Announced For Recruiters

November will be a busy month for students seeking careers in industry and government, according to W. I. Morris, the college's director of Placement.

Mr. Morris recently released a list of dates in November on which recruiters will visit this campus to interview prospective employees. The list includes nine dates and recruiters will come from private industrial firms as well as government.

On November 2 representatives from Dow Corning Corporation, Midland, Michigan, will visit the campus. The Dow representatives will interview majors in engineering, business administration, and mathematics.

Two days later, on November 4, engineering and mathematics majors will be interviewed by representatives of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. A representative of the Women's Army Corps will interview young ladies interested in serving in that branch of the service on November 10.

The next day, November 11, a team from the Norfolk Naval Yard will interview engineering majors, while representatives of the General Electric Co., Daytona Beach Florida, will be on campus November 13. The GE representatives will interview electrical engineering, mechanical engineering, mathe-

Two students at A&T College recently attended a two-day symposium, "American Women in Science and Engineering" conducted at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Cambridge, Mass.

Retired Urban League Official Keynotes Opportunities Confab

An audience at A&T College was told last week that too many employers in the nation are looking for the "instant Negro."

The speaker was Dr. Julius Thomas, New York, retired official of the National Urban League and Greensboro native. He was delivering the keynote address at the Fourth Annual Professional Opportunities Conference.

Dr. Thomas described the "instant Negro" as a new type job seeker, denied all his life the opportunity to gain experience at the mid-management level, but like instant tea or coffee, upon a moment's notice, is ready to perform in top-level positions.

"We, in the Urban League," he said, "get many requests every day for nuclear physicists, Ph.D.'s in highly technical areas, and the like, but not nearly so many requests in lower level management areas. They want and expect us to provide the 'instant Negro'."

He told the students that, as difficult as the assignment is, they must work that much harder to meet the new challenges and opportunities now available to them.

He listed three important developments which he said are certain to affect the lives of the young people in college today.

The population explosion, he said, will create new and big socioeconomic problems. "The solution of these problems will require the best thinking of trained people."

Dr. Thomas said, "The nation has been plain, simple in discriminating against a group of people on whom it has spent much money in training." "Big industries and the federal government are taking a new hard look at this situation," he said, "and you, and people like you, are certain to gain."

He listed as the third development the responsibility of the American people in the international picture in helping the underdeveloped countries in the world. "The Negro

English Dept.'s Kelley And Turner Author Books

Mrs. Carrye H. Kelley, associate professor of English, is the author of a recently published book, PROFILES OF FIVE ADMINISTRATORS

Copyrighted in August, the work is subtitled THE AGRICULTURAL AND TECHNICAL COLLEGE HISTORY-DIGEST, and chronicles the administrations of five A&T presidents: John O. Crosby, James B. Dudley, Ferdinand D. Bluford, Warmonth T. Gibbs, and Samuel D. Proctor.

Originally consisting of 450 pages, the book was condensed to less than 100 pages at the suggestion of Dr. Proctor, who was then president of the college. The book is being published as a part of the College Bulletin.

Mrs. Kelley, who was prompted to undertake the task of writing the work by the lack of any published work on the growth of the college, begins the book with a discussion of the conditions surrounding the founding of the institution. The book covers the period up to April 10, 1964.

An A&T graduate, Mrs. Kelley is the author of another book, A GUIDE TO WRITING, which for some years was used as the text for the course which is now English 100.

The author has been a member of the A&T faculty since 1939. One of the first women to graduate from A&T College in 1932, she

Adult Education Director To Give Main Address At Annual Convocation

A&T College will observe the seventy-third year of its founding at the annual Founders' Day Convocation Thursday, November 5. The program is scheduled to commence at 9:00 A.M. in Charles Moore Gymnasium.

Dr. Edward W. Brice, director of the Adult Education Branch of the United States Office of Education, will deliver the main address.

The former president of Clinton Junior College, Rock Hill, South Carolina, Dr. Brice is a founding member of the Adult Education Association of the United States. He served as that organization's first vice president.

Prior to his present assignment, he served in foreign assignments with the United States Department of State and the International Cooperation Administration in Liberia and Nepal. He has also served as an adviser to the Bureau of African Affairs.

A graduate of Tuskegee Institute, he holds the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Pennsylvania.

Founders' Day was formerly known as Dudley Day. Prior to 1942 and beginning in 1925, the first Friday in November was set aside to commemorate the life of Dr. James B. Dudley (b. November 2, 1859; d. April 4, 1925), second president of the college.

Since 1942, however, the day has been designated Founders' Day and tribute has been paid to all who have been responsible for the growth of the institution, especially those who have served as its presidents.

The observance will feature a formal inspection of the Army and Air Force ROTC detachments. The inspection and review have been scheduled for the North Campus Drill Field beginning at 8:15 A.M.

Completed Forms Are Required For Nat'l Exam

Less than two weeks remain for prospective teachers who plan to take the National Teacher Examinations at A&T College on December 12, 1964, to submit their registrations for these tests to Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey. Dr. Charles L. Hayes, Director of Teacher Education announced today. Registrations for the examinations must be forwarded so as to reach the Princeton Office not later than November 13, Dr. Hayes advised.

Bulletins of Information describing registration procedures and continuing Registration Forms may be obtained from the Department of Education and Psychology or directly from the National Teacher Examinations, Education Testing Service, Box 911, Princeton, New Jersey.

At the one-day test session a candidate may take the Common Examinations, which includes tests in Professional Education and General Education, and one of the 13 Teaching Area Examinations which are designed to evaluate his understanding of the subject matter and methods applicable to the area he may be assigned to teach.

Each candidate will receive an Admission Ticket advising him of holds the M.A. degree in English from New York University and the M.A. degree in history from the University of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Kelley is presently studying at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

To the aspiring writer, she offers this advice: "Start writing now and continue to write every day, even if it has to be about the weather. Begin now."

Dr. Darwin T. Turner, chairman of the Department of English, is also the author of a recently published book.

Published during the summer by Wellesley Press, the work is a small volume of poems entitled KATHARSIS. The volume sells for $1.50.

One of the busiest men on campus, Dr. Turner has managed to combine his writing with a host of other chores. For example, he is currently serving on a committee appointed by the State Department of Education to evaluate Livingstone College.

During the summer, Dr. Turner attended conferences at Wellesley

What's Your Excuse?

Are you fresh out of excuses. Do you need a good one for Monday? Well, maybe it's not too late for you after all; and these new excuses may make a favorable impression on your instructor. Besides, you may want to make your life more interesting and gain a little sympathy as you go along.

Don't settle for old worn-out excuses. Your professor is too familiar with them, and unless you can lie with a straight face, you may end up in more trouble than you can handle. Medical dictionaries now list 300 or more specific fears which may be used as good excuses for not accepting responsibility or acting as a normal individual should. If you can prove that your excuse has a medical background, your friends and your professor are bound to feel more sympathetic.

If you are embarrassed when the professor catches you sleeping in class, ask if you may have an appointment at his convenience; then, explain to him that you are suffering from a condition known to doctors as hypnophobia. Although hypnophobia is the fear of falling asleep, you may get away with sleeping in class next time because you'll have the professor thinking that you can't help yourself. Or if you like to sit in the back of the room so that you can be the first to leave when the bell rings, tell the professor you are a victim of ochlophobia which means that you can't stand crowds — and probably also apephobia, the fear of physical contact. With this one, you'll have to be careful because the professor may be asked to chaperon the next school dance. Of course, you can always tell him that your condition has improved.

When the guidance counselor tells you that you can do very good work, don't suddenly develop autophobia or fear of yourself; he really means it. You can do very good work if you don't contact phronemophobia or fear of thinking. If you come down with those two imposters, you have a good excuse to do nothing. Who could blame you? Everyone would be filled with sympathy. You could always cajole someone into getting your lesson for you. However, when final exams and theme writing time comes around, it's doubtful that your ailment and afflictions will be of service to you.

You can make it if you really try. Always keep a bag full of fresh excuses handy; and if you get into serious trouble and don't have time to reach into the bag for one — since the choices are practically endless, you should memorize a few — just tell the dean that you suffer from pantophobia. That means you fear everything — including the dean.

What did I tell you? You can't lose. Learn a few prefixes, add phobia, and you've got something that will stump the professor. Don't over-play your hand. Talk your condition over with your professor. Never go to the infirmary because Dr. Davis may find that there is nothing wrong with you. Take a sick leave from school as if you had to have regular treatments for your illnesses.

There may come a time when you won't want to go to class; and if it's snowing, you have a legitimate excuse for being absent — that is, if you can convince your instructor that you are suffering from chionophobia or fear of snow. You may even be lucky enough to have the dean give you an official excuse. Don't push your luck. Always refrain from giving the dean a detailed account of your unusual afflictions, and you've got it made. The dean may even develop a few of these impressive sounding phobias himself. Who knows?

Historians Will Agree

Historians will probably remember the incidents of the past week and agree that they were some of the most momentous events in recent history.

Top stories vied for headline space in the nation's news media. Sudden and unexpected occurrences reminded many that things were not so stable as they appeared.

Probably the most shocking and unexpected event was the ouster of Nikita Khrushchev from his position atop the Communist Party and the Soviet government. The full implications of this event are yet to be fully evaluated and may never be known except by those in the inner chambers of Soviet policy decisions.

By some strange quirk of nature an even more foreboding incident took place at the same time of Khrushchev's ouster. The most populous and militant nation in the world announced that it had exploded a nuclear device, thus gaining entrance into the select club of those who own the bomb. Although the Chinese detonation was no surprise (State Department officials had predicted it weeks in advance), it served as ample notice that despite the test bomb treaty man was still chained to the possibility of nuclear destruction.

In England, America's staunchest ally, the party in power had been toppled, and the opposition clung to a slim majority of only four seats. Harold Wilson, England's new prime minister, takes office when many matters of common interest between the two NATO partners must be resolved. Wilson and the Laborites have pledged to work for admission of Red China to the United Nations (a move which the United States has long opposed) and are known to oppose the Multi-Lateral Force, a project given high priority by the U. S..

The nation's domestic scene was shaken not only by the rapid fire events in other nations, but also by a scandal in the office of the President. Walter Jenkins, long trusted aide of President Johnson, was booked on a morals charge and joined Bobby Baker on the list of top LBJ aides who had soiled the Chief Executive's image and prestige. Not only did the Jenkins affair add fuel to Senator Goldwater's charges of moral bankruptcy at the highest levels, it also raised the question of the possibility of a leak in national security.

That one week's events, then, will go down in history making it one of the most unsettling periods in the history of man.

Early Autumn Seen As Time Of Brilliance

With the hurricane season over at last, mankind may now bask in the beauties of a brief but brilliant Indian summer.

Following too much rainy, dreary weather, the warm sunny days are a welcome sight. Not only do they delay the harsh rigors of winter and provide one last chance to suck in nature's wonders, but these glorious days also fill the air with fragrance and crispness which make one feel glad to be alive.

What a wonderful time for meditation and resolution! There is no better time for man to search himself, to commune with nature, and to be thankful for all the fruits of nature which he is allowed to enjoy.

Surely such a time of majestic grandeur was inspiring Wordsworth when he wrote:

It is a beauteous evening calm and free,

The holy time is quiet as a nun

Breathless with the adoration;

The broad sun

Is shining down in tranquillity;

The gentleness of heaven

Broods o'er the sea.

Yes, autumn, with its azure skies and russet leaves, is nature's most spectacular season. Autumn's Indian summer beauty is enhanced by the myriad of colors which prevails. Spreading their lofty limbs, nature's gems exchange their green finery of earlier days for one of a more magnificent hue.

But, alas! Such a season is all too brief. Like all good things, autumn too must come to an end. It is an all too-short transitory period between two more violent periods.

Soon the majestic oaks will shed their golden leaves and be left bare and gray in the winds of winter. One morning man will awake to find the golden landscape transformed and devoid of its brilliance.

So enjoy this brief interlude of beauty and grandeur. Drink in nature's beauties while they are plentiful, for their days are numbered. Store up your memories of golden oaks, crisp air, and crystal blue skies for the long, gray winter ahead.

1964 Campaign Causes Realignment Of Parties

America's quadrennial political wars are racing towards their conclusion with the nation's voters going to the polls in less than two weeks.

As this campaign grows towards an end, it becomes more and more evident that its effects on American politics will go far beyond the November 3 election. Although the immediate winner will become known at that time, forces are at work altering many features of the American party system. The full effect of these forces cannot be completely assessed by students of political science until months to come.

One thing is sure, the emergence of Barry Goldwater and the far-right as powers in the Republican Party has altered traditional party alignment. Mr. Goldwater has used as one of his themes "a choice and not an echo," thus departing from the recent party trend of moderation.

Moves by Mr. Goldwater and his backers, such as the refusal to repudiate extremist groups and his subsequent convention acceptance

Small Points On Etiquette

By BRENDA MOORE

Delicacy of manner at the table stamps both man and woman; for one can, at a glance, discern whether a person has been trained to eat well — for example, to hold the knife and fork properly, to eat without the slightest sound of the lips, to drink quietly, to use the napkin right, to make no noise with any of the implements at the table, and, finally, to eat slowly and meticulously the food thoroughly.

There is no position where the innate refinement of a person is more fully exhibited than at the table, and no where that those who have not been trained in table etiquette feel more keenly their deficiencies. Take the fork in the right hand, and eat all the food with it. When both knife and fork have been used finally, they should be laid diagonally across the plate, with both handles toward the right hand; this is understood by well-trained waiters to be the signal for removing them, together with the plate.

When there is any doubt as to the best way to do a thing, it is wise to follow that which is the most rational, and that will almost invariably be found to be proper etiquette. To be at ease is a great step toward enjoying your own dinner and making yourself agreeable to the company.

There is reason for everything in polite usage; thus the reason one does not blow a thing to cool it, is not only that it is an inelegant and vulgar action intrinsically, but because it may be offensive to others. It implies haste which, whether from greediness or a desire to get away, is equally objectionable. Everything else may be as easily traced to its origin as fit and becoming.

To conclude, one seats oneself properly at the table. The chair should not be pulled too close to the table, for the natural result of that is the inability to use one's knife and fork without inconveniencing one's neighbor; the elbows are to be held well in and close to one's side. This cannot be done if the chair is too near the table. One must not lie or lean along the table, nor rest one's arms upon it. Finally, when rising from your chair, leave it where it stands.

Homecoming!

This is HOMECOMING WEEK! Yes, once again with all of its glamour, we begin our homecoming activities. We have the opportunity to play host to the Aggie Alumni and to our visitors from Morgan State College. Beginning Monday, October 26, the senior class presents a program informing the students of the true meaning of homecoming. Then each class will give a program each night leading up to the coronation ceremonies on Thursday evening. On Friday comes the great event before the game, the pre-dawn dance. Yes, it is official. Let it be known, however, that this is still a college activity on the college campus. We are certain that each student will conduct himself with proper decorum. Saturday highlights the homecoming parade, the big game, and the homecoming ball. The week is still not complete until we attend the Sunday morning worship services. So you see homecoming week is full of excitement.

It seems always necessary for students to be reminded of school spirit and support for the team. Are we going to let ourselves lag behind the spirit of our visitors? Come on, Fellow Aggies! Let us show our visitors how overwhelming Aggie school spirit can spark our team on to victory. Let us all help make this the best homecoming ever!!

Democrats, switches are being made in the other direction.

Mr. Goldwater has shown considerable strength in the traditionally Democratic "solid South;" and for the first time since Reconstruction a Republican is given a chance of winning a majority of the Southern votes. Pollsters indicate that this is one area of the country in which the odds are not so heavy against Mr. Goldwater, and he is believed to be holding an edge over the President.

Though the so-called white backlash is not confined to the South, it is strongest here in an area which has always been obsessed with the idea of race. Mr. Goldwater has seen fit to play upon Southern emotions on questions of states rights as well.

His vote against the civil rights legislation along with his attacks on federal power and the endorsement of ultra-conservative groups and individuals has caused Southern audiences to chant "We want Barry" with a passion and to picture him as champion of their cause.

Indeed, it appears that Mr. Goldwater is guilty of the charge of whistling "Dixie" out of one side of his mouth and "Yankee Doodle Dandy" out of the other. Arch segregationists like Leander Perez, the Louisiana parish boss, and Robert Scoggins, Grand Dragon of the KKK in South Carolina, have shared honored positions on platforms with Mr. Goldwater during a recent tour of the South.

Such forces are conspiring to change the face of American politics. Perhaps Mr. Goldwater is the temporary spokesman for a fraction of faction as Senator Humphrey has charged. Perhaps the staunchly conservative movement will be crushed by a resounding defeat at the polls November 3 and catapult the moderate, more sensible wing back into power. All of this remains to be seen. One thing is already certain, however; party politics and party affiliations are not what they used to be.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Cary P. Bell, former editor of the REGISTER and a 1964 honor graduate, is one of forty students selected from among more than 300 applicants as first year participants in the Foreign Affairs Scholars Program. During the summer, he served as an intern in the office of Mr. William J. Crockett, Deputy Undersecretary of State for Administration. He is currently studying at the American University School of International Studies, Washington, D. C. on a four thousand dollar grant from the Ford Foundation as a part of the Program.)

CARY P. BELL

Thanks to the Ford Foundation and the concern of the nation's three agencies primarily engaged in foreign affairs, forty students are presently preparing for possible careers as officers in the Foreign Service Corps. Eventually 160 students will be affected by the four-year program.

Participants in the Foreign Affairs Scholars Program are striking examples of the efforts to include Americans of all origins in the procedures of government.

Government officials are enthusiastic about the program and are giving it full support. The three top administrators for the nation's foreign service agencies — Mr. William J. Crockett, Deputy Undersecretary of State for Administration; Mr. Carl Rowan, director of the United States Information Agency; and Mr. David Bell, administrator of the Agency for International Development — have all given the program high priority in their planning.

Mr. Crockett points out that, to be effective, these agencies must involve and represent all areas of the American citizenry. The foreign scholars program is seen as going in that direction.

Through funds provided by the Ford Foundation, twelve of the participants are enrolled as first-year graduate students at the American University School of International Service, the John Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, Columbia University, the University of Chicago, University of Pittsburgh, and University of Virginia. Twenty-eight others have returned to their final year of undergraduate work at nearly thirty institutions.

The types of interests and backgrounds represented in the program are about as diverse and varied as the population itself. Though all the participants are from some minority group, their composition is by no means homogeneous.

Schools represented range from Morehouse to Princeton, Spelman to Sarah Lawrence, A&T to the University of Kansas, and Tougaloo to the University of Pennsylvania. Since twenty-five per cent of the first forty participants are females, the program cannot be said to discriminate against that sex.

Nor can it be said that the program is top heavy with political science majors. On the contrary, the group includes language majors, history majors, economics majors, and even a chemistry major, among others. These may be explained in the effort to attract well-rounded individuals.

Under the guidance of Dr. Vincent J. Browne, director of the program, and Mrs. Eleanor P...

rar, an instructor in the Department of State's Foreign Service institute, these first forty participants spent their summer in Washington working as interns or student assistants in one of the three agencies.

From Monday through Friday, each worked on the regular eight-hour workday schedule. Saturdays were taken up by seminars with a host of lecturers on topics from minority groups in the American culture to Communism. Lecturers ranked from Dr. Francis Wilcox, dean of the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, and Dr. Kenneth Clarke, the noted sociologist, to Paul Hume, music critic for the Washington Post.

Each student also completed a research topic which resulted in a paper of 1500 words related to some phase of American foreign policy.

What are the impressions of the students who are presently enrolled in the program? Perhaps Sam Johnson, Morehouse graduate now at the University of Pittsburgh, summed them up best in one word: Work. Though there was little time to while away in the usual summer tradition and little time for social activities, each is enthusiastic about the program.

All realize that a great deal still depends upon them and their performance. The program represents the first of, hopefully, many steps in the right direction. Moreover, it opens new vistas and new opportunities for these and others who will follow from America's deprived minorities.

In the final analysis, much is left up to the students themselves. The success or failure of the program will depend upon the number who successfully pass the Foreign Service Entrance Examination and the Federal Service Entrance Examination and accept appointments with AID, USIA, the Department of State, or some other government agency. In the end, no exceptions are being made for them. Their entry as career officers is not automatic and is predicated upon the normal criteria.

So the big job really lies ahead and being accepted for the program was probably the easiest part of the process. Hopefully, however, the assistance provided will go far in preparing these participants for these obstacles; and within the next four years, the ranks of America's Foreign Service Corps should be entered by an increased number of citizens from minority groups.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Students who plan to do student teaching either during the winter or spring quarter must register with the Department of Education...

New Program Prepares Students For Careers In Foreign Service

A bold new program designed to prepare students from minority groups for careers in the foreign service has been launched through a grant from the Ford Foundation.

Officially known as the Foreign Affairs Scholars Program, the program was launched last spring with the blessings of high government officials, including Carl Rowan, director of the United States Information Agency; David Bell, head of the Agency for International Development; and William J. Crockett, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration.

The program is an outgrowth of the recognized need to include a greater representation of all segments of the American population in the Foreign Service and the small numbers from minority groups who had qualified in the past. Although the program is primarily geared toward the nation's three agencies primarily concerned with foreign relations, some participants are expected to enter other agencies.

It provides grants up to $4,000 for one year of graduate study for each participant in the areas of economics, government, international relations, and related fields. An undergraduate major in one of the above is not necessary, however. In addition, each participant serves as a summer intern in the Department of State, United States Information Agency, or the Agency for International Development.

Initially twenty-nine seniors and eleven first year graduate students have been selected from the more than 300 first-year applicants. Thirty-one colleges and universities are represented. The program is expected to run four years and to affect approximately 160 students.

To be selected for the program, each student has to file a written application along with transcripts and recommendations. Each must also successfully pass an interview conducted by a three-man team of Foreign Service Officers.

"can IBM use my degree?"

If your degree is in Liberal Arts, Engineering, the Sciences, or Business Administration, you may very well find your route for advancement at IBM. The marketing and application of computers offer opportunity to new graduates in a variety of ways.

At IBM, Data Processing Systems Engineers study the best ways to solve customer problems. They find the best methods and select the best equipment to handle each type of problem. If your college experience has taught you to organize information and approach a problem systematically, see IBM.

An IBM Data Processing Representative shows customer executives how IBM can help business become more efficient. In selling to business, industry, government, or defense, you use your own initiative and individuality. Advancement comes as you develop skills acquired in college.

Speaking Of Sports With Hank

The Aggies really got off to a dismal start this season losing to Fort Eustis 37-12 and Tennessee A&I 60-6.

This was the worst Aggie start in quite some time and nobody could explain why.

The Aggies looked impressive during fall drills and everyone in camp expected them to break from the starting gate just as they did last season, with a bang.

Aggie fans were sadly disappointed when the Fort Eustis Wheels came to town and swamped the Aggies 37-12. The Aggies had defeated the Wheels the previous season and Aggie fans were expecting the same to happen again.

The Wheels had different ideas, however, and behind the running of Dave McDonald, soundly defeated the Aggies.

Bright spots for A&T were Cornell Gordon, Clift Matthews, and Willie Beasley on the offensive unit and Conrad Lattimore, Haywood McKie, William Sinclair, Elvin Bethea and Jim Petteway.

Gordon and Furney Pollock, our punting specialists, were injured in this game; and Pollock was expected to be out for six weeks while Gordon was to miss the next game against a very rough and tough Tennessee A&I eleven who were still smarting over a 20-18 defeat suffered at the hands of the Aggies last season.

Well, Tennessee came to town; and come to town they did. They brought along their sophomore Coach Merritt and a band of hungry Tigers who completely annihilated the Aggies by the tune of 60-6. Aggie fans don't care to remember this one except to say that maybe this will pull us together for better days ahead.

The J. C. Smith Bulls were next and they were really fired up. They had heard about the Aggie misfortune and were ready to capitalize on all Aggie let downs and misfortunes and try to make it three in a row.

The Aggies had different ideas and soon changed the J. C. Smith Bulls ideas about the outcome of the game also. The Aggies finally got on the winning trail with the resounding 46-27 thumping of the Bulls. The Bulls were a replacement for the Shaw University Bears who, after sustaining two losses to the Aggie totaling 129-6 over a span of two years, decided to call it quits.

The Bulls did manage to make a better showing than did Shaw as they managed to score 27 points, and even reports from the Smith camp indicated that they expected to beat the Aggies.

This was the game in which the Aggie offensive line started to roll. Gordon started the ball rolling with a 15 yard scoring strike to the vastly improved Conrad Lattimore for the evening's first score.

Michael Johnson, a flashy freshman back, added scoring jaunts of 45 and 34 yards and totaled over 100 yards for the night.

Camie Elmore, a freshman full back from Shelby, North Carolina, intercepted an errant Bull pass and scored.

Willie Beasley picked up 12 points for the night with a 55-yard-touchdown run and a 0-yard pass interception.

Clifton Matthews picked up 8 points on a 15-yard swing pass and a 2 point conversion.

"Bevo" Francis turned in a spectacular night with some offensive razzle dazzle as he caught a Cornell Gordon pass and, as he was being hit, flipped the ball to Beasley who was trailing the play; and Beasley waltzed into the end zone. He also stood the fans on their ears with one of his patented one-handed snares of a Willie Gray pass.

Defensive standouts for the evening were William "Bull" Sinclair who did an excellent job for his hometown fans; Elvin Bethea, Robert Jeffreys, Heywood McKie, and Conrad Lattimore.

These men teamed well with Sinclair and played as if they were a part of the Smith backfield all night.

Ernest Buggs returned to action in this one and did a fine job in his first outing.

The Aggies had started to roll at last and their next test was a pesky band of Spartans from Norfolk State.

The Spartans always manage to pester A&T for a quarter; but, from the starting gun, it was clear that the Aggies were not to be denied in this one.

Clifton Matthews, Willie Beasley, Melvin, Phillips, and Cornell Gordon spear-headed the Aggie scoring parade and even the defense got into the act as Robert Jeffreys a guard and linebacker recovered a Cormie Elmore fumble in the Aggie end zone for a T.D.

The entire Aggie forward wall played an excellent game; and except for a couple of mental lapses on the part of our defensive backs, the score would have been 30-0 instead of 30-12.

The first real conference test was next for the Aggies in the person of the rough Maryland Hawks. The Hawks were boasting about the biggest and fastest team in the conference. This did nothing at all to Aggies spirit, however.

The game was played in a sea of mud as rain fell throughout the game.

Cornell Gordon managed to hit Clift Matthews with a 68 yard scoring strike and a two point conversion, but the Hawks' Emerson Boozer countered with a 78-yard scoring jaunt; and a blocked Aggie punt resulted in a safety for an 8-8 tie.

COMING GAMES

The T.C. Rams are next and they always play up a pretty close first half. This season the Rams are weaker than ever. Looking for another Aggie run away in this one.

Perhaps the most important game of the season is next and that happened to fall on homecoming; our foes, the Morgan Bears.

The Bears really shelled us last year 21-0 and are expecting to do more of the same this year.

The Aggies know well that a victory over Morgan could very well mean the CIAA Championship for A&T, and you can bet your last that it will be all stops out in this one.

In spite of Morgan's impressive record to date and the fact that the Aggies are off to a slow start, I pick A&T by 6 in this one.

All this corner asks is that all Aggie fans come out and support our team in this one.

Good Grades

real success in the work of the organization had come about by high school teachers and college teachers working closely together.

The visitors were welcomed by Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, president of the college. The meet was conducted under the supervision of Dr. Robert S. Beale, chairman of the High School Relations Committee, and counseling, both at the college.

Among the main attractions on tomorrow will be, left to right, Flag Twirlers Elizabeth Baxter and Mary Johnson; Head Majorette Valeria Avery; and Drum Major Benny Davis.

STEP FORWARD WITH FORD MOTOR COMPANY

An Open Letter to the 1965 College Graduate from Donald N. Frey, Assistant General Manager, Ford Division of Ford Motor Company

Donald N. Frey was awarded a bachelor's degree in metallurgical engineering by the University of Michigan in 1947 and a doctorate in 1950. One year later, he joined Ford Motor Company as manager of the Metallurgical Department in the Scientific Laboratory. In 1962, Dr. Frey was appointed assistant general manager of the Ford Division with responsibility for all engineering, product planning and purchasing activities. He is 41 years old.

America's automobile industry is in the midst of a challenging era, with prospects of an even more exciting and demanding tempo in the years to come. Ford Motor Company is determined to achieve leadership in all phases of its operation. This leadership promises to bring lasting success to the company, its employees and its stockholders.

It will take people to accomplish this objective. Engineering, finance, styling, marketing, product planning, sales—all require people with the knowledge, judgment and personal drive to avail themselves of the unprecedented opportunities offered by a great industry.

The automobile business is growing. More cars are being bought now than ever before. With increases in population and consumer buying power, even more will be bought in the future. Realizing this, Ford Motor Company seeks to attract college graduates who have the capacity to grow with the company and the market.

Right now, our plans call for employing about a thousand of the best 1965 graduates we can find, with all types of educational backgrounds. We need specialists, but we also need persons with broad liberal-arts training who can handle a wide variety of assignments. Actually, in our company, many graduates grow into jobs totally unrelated to their degrees. They have discovered that Ford offers intellectually challenging opportunities for those with the ability to seize them. We invite you to make the same discovery.
