He had been assigned two sections of the 9th grade for teaching responsibility. On this day he was teaching the boys in the classroom on "Growing Hybrid Corn." The situations surrounding his reason for teaching this job were: (1) all the boys grow corn, (2) many of the boys grow hybrid corn (3) some of the class members have never realized the value (4) in 1957, North Carolina grew 70 per cent hybrid corn.

The primary objectives for teaching the job as outlined by the trainee were: (1) To develop understandings of the importance and value of hybrid corn (2) to develop the ability to select good hybrid seed corn each year, and (3) to develop the ability to produce and care for hybrid seed corn properly and profitably.

The trainee handled the classes very well. The students were motivated and their participation was good. The trainee made use of limited visual aids.

The afternoon was spent in conference with the trainee. We reviewed and discussed the student teacher's progress, schedule of participating experiences, lesson plan, course outline, workbooks, and many other things relating to his student teaching program. The strong and weak points were pointed up.

I could see progress and it is felt that this young man has good teaching potentials.
