Inman Voices Opinion On Student Body Meetings

Bennie L. Glover

With one entire semester gone down in the books as history and another semester approaching its mid-way mark, the question in the minds of many concerned students on campus now is whether or not the Student Government Association will have a student body meeting this school term.

This excludes January 29, 9 a.m. meeting reported in the Feb. 1 edition of THE A&T REGISTER in which the president of the Student Government Association said only 10 persons showed.

The vice-president of the Student Government Association, Lloyd Inman, in a recent interview responded to this question. He stated that, according to the Constitution of the Student Government Association of North Carolina A&T State University, Article V, Section 2-F, it is a power and duty of the President of the SGA, "to call and preside at meetings of the student body."

This same constitution further sets forth in Article V, Section 2-N, that the SGA President is "to make periodic State of the University Addresses to the student body."

Inman in expressing his own viewpoint on the subject of student body meetings explained that he personally felt that, regardless of who the SGA President is, he or she should try to hold at least one student body meeting a month if only to say hello to the students.

He said he felt his move would prove to the students that the SGA's main objective is to serve them by keeping them abreast of developments around campus that will be affecting them in the future.

The vice president stated that, it is "very disappointing" to think in terms of the various programs funded by federal and civil grants going on in the various schools and departments on campus that many students enrolled here at A&T do not know about.

"I feel the SGA officials should be the first to make an all out effort to inform the student body of such programs and their relevance to them; after all, they elected us to carry out duties of this nature," he further stated.

A student body meeting will be the proper place to pass on first hand information to the students, he said. "Students have approached me saying 'the school is run on rumors', and I feel that the SGA officers should be the first to spearhead a move to falsify this statement," explained Inman.

The vice-president went on to say that he did not think the student body should have to petition for a student body meeting when those responsible for calling one knew when they ran for office the obligations they would have to meet.

"If the persons running for office last year were not willing to meet these obligations, they should not have run for an SGA

He stressed the point that the SGA offices are not part-time positions and should not be used as part-time positions, for they are very demanding and those that ran did so on a voluntary basis.

Inman could not say whether or not a student body meeting will be held this school year for he is not empowered by the SGA Constitution to make this decision and, at present, he does not know of President Marilyn Marshall's intentions.

However, the vice-president, in closing the interview, asked that the following quote be passed along to the student body for each student to ponder; "May we, God helping us, become part of the answer and not part of the problem."

School Still Searches For Dean

The Search Committee appointed earlier in the school year by Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, Chancellor of the University, is still receiving both recommendations and applications for the position of dean of the School of Arts and Sciences.

Students, graduate and undergraduate, are eligible to write letters of recommendation for the position. Any student recommending a person should note such qualifications as college/university level administrative experience, scholarly achievement and possession of the terminal degree (doctoral) in arts and sciences.

Letters should be addressed to the chairman of the Search Committee—Dr. Wendell Jones, Chairman, Department of Mathematics, Merrick Hall, A&T State University.

Students Present Displays At Duke

Motivation for children's outside reading came alive when Mrs. Gladys F. White, director of the reading laboratory, and four A&T students presented some original displays of ideas and stories to some ESEA reading teachers and Right-to-Read directors at Duke University, Tuesday.

The presentation was a demonstration which included interaction and involvement of the reading teachers in using "energizers" to awaken and enhance the pupil's interests in reading a variety of books. Many of the groups' ideas covered "new twists" to old ideas. The participants stressed the importance of creating a stimulating reading environment by enthusiastic, knowledgeable and creative teachers who must also be facilitators of learning.

This staff development session was one of thirty planned by the State Development of Public Instruction. The student participants from A&T were Mrs. Genevieve Williams, and Mrs. Annie Matthews, graduate students; and Miss Vickie Goins and Mrs. Edwina Chapman, undergraduate students.

Participants were from the areas of children's literature, reading and book selection. photo by Lance

Students Tell How Gas Shortage Changes Plans

One of the most prevalent University Choir Will Appear In Concert

The University Choir will appear in concert, 6 p.m. Sunday in Harrison Auditorium. As part of its annual spring concert the choir will present songs from the traditional spiritual settings, including such favorites as, "Didn't My Lord Deliver Daniel" and "Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray."

Leading the group of 36 singers will be Gloria Hinson, soprano; Linda Thomas, soprano; Eldean Kean, mezzo soprano; and Ernest Frierson, baritone.

Kathy Hatcher will narrate and Janet Jones will accompany on piano.

"This is one group that makes a joyous sound," said Dr. Howard T. Pearsall, conductor of the group. "These young people really enjoy what they are doing and, therefore, are able to capture a mood."

The choir usually travels more than 3000 miles annually on concert tours and is scheduled to make its northern tour during the spring break.

The choir will perform in Philadelphia; Burlington, N.J.; Far Rockaway, N.Y.; Portland, Maine; Rahway, N.J.; Hartford, Conn.; Long Island, N.Y.; and Norfolk, Va.

Pearsall, a native of Pittsburgh and a product of the music department at Fisk University, has conducted choirs at A&T since 1950.

issues facing Americans today is the energy crisis. It is no longer an issue that the news-reporter on television talks about, but one that's faced daily by the average persons.

Here on A&T's campus the gas shortage is a much-talked about issue. When asked how the shortage had affected them, students, faculty and A&T employees responded with negative answers.

Shirley Townsend, a sophomore business administration major, said, "I can't visit home as often as I would like, and I don't like waiting in long lines for gas."

Ronald Troy, a freshman accounting major, merely said, "I can't go home."

Mrs. Christine Mitchell, a counselor in High Rise Dorm said, "My husband drives a taxi. Sometimes he has to stand in line for two to three hours. This is kind of disgusting when you have to make a living this way. I think that, since he caters to the public, he should have some priority in getting gas. Also the shortage has made it hard to get to work."

Gladys Outlaw, a sophomore English education major, seemed to be bitter. "Even though I do not have a car, the gas shortage is affecting me also. It is more difficult to obtain transportation because no one seems to have gas. The gasoline economy is being boosted greatly by the high rises in the price of gasoline. I think that there is not a real gasoline shortage, but the President is simply using that as a method to repay the favor of the gas companies that supported him in his presidential campaign. Nixon is controlling the energy crisis."

Johnny Caine, a commuting student from Winston-Salem, said, "It's hard to get gas especially this week since 90 per cent of the stations are closed in Winston.

Who needs the gas shortage? Certainly not the people on A&T's campus.

Let's just say we're talent scouts.

We're looking for talent to fly Navy. Men who are leaders, like LTJG Joe Mason of Champaign, Illinois. He's a Naval Flight Officer and he's got what it takes. The drive, the ability and the determination.

The Navy's Aviation Program is a solid opportunity for a college graduate to launch a career in aviation as either a Naval Aviator or Naval Flight Officer. Both are rugged and demanding, but worth it.

As a Naval Flight Officer (NFO), you and the pilot are a team in the aircraft. You'll be trained in navigation, aviation electronics and meteorology... just to name a few.

As a Naval Aviator, you are the pilot. This also requires vigorous military training, academic and physical conditioning. Your energies will be channeled towards flying jets, multi-engine aircraft or helicopters.

In either case, your function is vital to the management of men and aircraft. That's for real. So is the pay, the great lifestyle and the travel.

Mail this coupon for details on our aviation programs. Or see your local recruiter.

The opportunity is for real... and so are we. NAVY

Summer Intern Program Offered To Students In Area Colleges

A summer intern program, which combines 12 weeks of work in local government with a weekly academic seminar on urban politics, will be offered again this summer in Greensboro.

The program will run from May 26 through Aug. 9.

The intern program is designed specifically for selected students from A&T, Bennett College, Greensboro College, Guilford College, High Point College and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Residents of Guilford County who attend college elsewhere also may apply.

Applications for the program should be sent to the UNC-G Department of Political Science, which is coordinating the summer intern program, which was offered for the first time last year. The deadline for applications is Mar. 8.

Preference in selections will be given to rising juniors and seniors. Students majoring in any academic field may apply. Students selected for the program will be able to earn approximately $650 to $900 during the 12-week period, depending on the availability of funds—plus six hours of academic credit.

The academic credit will come from UNC-G's Summer School, where all students participating in the intern program will be required to enroll as fee-paying students. Each intern will be enrolled in a seminar entitled "Selected Topics in Urban Politics." Three hours of credit will be granted for the seminar and three more hours of credit for the internship. Room and board may be arranged by the individual in a UNC-G residence hall.

The program will be directed by Dr. James Svava, an assistant professor of political science at UNC-G. He said the internships and the seminars are designed to complement each other.

"As far as the student is concerned, this will be a summer job which has a real educational component," explained Dr. Svava. "In effect, we're creating a new kind of classroom in the community. And we feel it will offer the student a unique kind of educational experience."

Dr. Svava said he is hoping to have 18 internships to offer through the program this summer. Final arrangements are being developed now. Last summer five interns were placed in city government. In addition, interns were placed with the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce, Drug Action Council, Greensboro Association for Poor People, Inter-Church Ministry for Social Change, Junior Chamber of Commerce, League of Women Voters, Urban Ministry and Voluntary Action Center.

In general, the interns will work as administrative assistants or research assistants, dependent on the agency involved. Students will be selected for the program from their applications by a special committee of faculty and agency representatives.

Students May Be Eligible For Veteran Benefits

By Mary C. Reid

Certain benefits are being offered to students whose father or mother was a veteran and is now deceased.

Eddie Hargrove, director of Veteran Affairs, stated that there are a number of students who are attending not only this university, but others who are eligible for this fund. Hargrove said that each semester the department has found students who are eligible for the financial assistance and they aren't aware of such benefits. In some cases as many as four out of one family are entitled to the funds.

Hargrove, stated that the money comes from the United States Government. Scholarships ranging from $22 a month to a full four-year scholarship is being offered.

Hargrove said that he would like to get the information to the students who are now attending college and who need additional financial assistance and especially to those who are planning to attend college in the future and have no source of funds.

If anyone feels that he is eligible for these funds, he should contact Hargrove for additional information at the office of the Advisor to Veteran Students. The Office is located on the first floor in East Gym.

Men Viewers Watch 'All My Children'

By Alease Linney

Soap operas are usually considered a housewife's pastime or almost any female's interest. But are the soap operas limited only to female viewers? Well, not here at A&T. Some male students admitted that they are soap opera fans.

Charles Plummer said, "I watch the two programs that come on after 'Gambit'. I think they're 'Love of Life' and 'Young and the Restless'. I don't have any classes during that time so I watch these two programs. They're all right. They keep you interested."

Jerry Caldwell stated, "I look at 'How to Survive a Marriage' whenever I'm in. The first time it came on, it was rather spicy, but it's slacked up now. I used to watch 'Dark Shadows' a long time ago; it was a horror flick."

Rospierre Harriston said, "I look at 'Love of Life', the one with the singer...Kate I think is her name. It's O.K. I can identify with it."

Willie Middlebrooks "I used to look at 'Secret Storm', but they took it off the air. I especially liked the priest because I know of some people in his position. I had started to looking at 'All my Children', but it got to be a bore. I used to look at 'Young and the Restless' because my girlfriend liked it."

Lloyd Inman: "I look at 'Love of Life'. I like programs with musically-inclined people. I also look at 'Young and the Restless' sometimes. But my favorite used to be 'Dark Shadows'."

Inman also stated that "it's nothing to be ashamed of. You'll find that most intelligent people you know of watch soap operas."

Other male students confessed to watching soap operas but asked that their names not be used. One student stated that "you would be surprised to know the number of male students that watch soap operas."

Economics Club Offers Essay Competition

has not been successful in stabilizing the economy.

The Economics Club of A&T State University is inaugurating the "Juanita Tate Economic Essay Competition" for this academic year. The preliminaries for the essay competition were organized by an elected committee of three: Rajendra Gupta, Dong Kuen Jeong and Dr. Donald Schaefer. The topic for this year's competition is "An Appraisal of the New Economic Policy: Phase I through Phase IV."

This title was chosen because the New Economic Policy Phase I through Phase IV—Wage and Price controls has been criticized on the grounds that it is a bad economic theory and it

The first prize winner will receive $50 and his name inscribed on the Tate Economic Essay Award Plaque. The second prize winner will receive $25; and third prize winner, $10.

Gupta, a member of the committee of three, states that, in order to qualify for the competition, a student must be an Economics or Agriculture Economics major.

The essay should be between 1500-3000 words. The entries should be submitted to Dr. David Chen, faculty advisor of the Economics Club, by Mar. 15.

Results and awards will be made on or prior to April 15. Judges of the essays will be Dr. Howard Robinson, Dr. Alice Kidder, and Dr. Donald Schaefer.

Athletics And Racism

With this week, basketball became king as tournaments began and championships are decided. And with all the anticipations, cheers and plans for the occasion, the status of teams from Black institutions has been molested.

We begin to realize increasingly that the plight of the Black athlete at a Black institution of higher education is merely an outgrowth of the stigma placed on Blacks as a whole in American society.

Chancellor L.C. Dowdy has summed up the denial of the opportunity for Black colleges to compete at the highest level of the National Collegiate Athletic Association as "sophisticated racism."

This is the same type of racism which in its most subtle form declares that Blacks have been sought to fill high positions, but that no qualified persons have been found.

It correlates with the 110 per cent theory which proposes that not only must Blacks be as well prepared as whites, but they must be better. So, in order for a team like the University of Maryland Eastern Shore to get a slot in the NCAA tournament, it must be better than UCLA or North Carolina State, not as good as.

Officials of the MEAC have told of their attempts to schedule games with predominantly white colleges which received poor response.

This snubbing of predominantly Black teams has repercussions for present players who have the ability to play pro ball, but who may be sought by major teams because their games are not broadcast or televised. Not only does it affect present players, but it also hurts high school recruitment of star players for an ailing athletic program.

Since some focus has been brought on the problem, it is hoped headway will be made in giving Black institutions, Black students, and Black athletes the status which they have already earned.

Taking A Look At Deprivation

By Rosie A. Stevens

Consider this for a moment.

A student walks out of an office. He has just been interviewed by a recruiter from Specific Propulsion Devices, Inc. He goes off to his room, changes his clothes for a pair of jeans, and runs off to class.

The story hit the front page of the campus semi-weekly. The place was a male dormitory. The problem was one of somewhat inhuman conditions. The solution was yet to be applied.

And let's look again.

The scene is one in a women's residence hall. The situation is one in which a line has formed. The reason for the line is to wash clothes. Out of four washers in a hall, only one is in workable condition; and it must service approximately 400 people in the newest dorm on campus.

This is a view from both the outside and from the inside. The young man changed his suit for a pair of faded jeans. His suit was for the world, and his jeans for still another world of deprivation which should not exist. He lives in that world, and so do 4,000 others.

This is a physical deprivation.

One may wear blue jeans by choice, but one does not tolerate the living conditions by choice except in the most negative way.

Now let's look at something else.

The time is three in the afternoon. The air is full of yawns. The lecture is not only dry, but no copies have been passed around to the class for a later reading. Less than 30 per cent sinks in.

A test is given, and less than five per cent passes. The question is directly asked of the instructor: Do you curve your grades? The instructor says yes, knowing that the grades he has, form the points of a right angle in the second quadrant rather than a curve, when plotted.

We could go on and on about this, with curved grades, cheating, etc.

The dean's list swells, and everyone is proud of the progress of the university, but is there really very much progress? This is deprivation in a dangerous of the word.

Chancellor Asks Co-operation

The following is an open letter to all departments and organizations from Chancellor Lewis C. Dowdy

Feb. 8

Dear Colleagues:

It has come to my attention that some organizations and departments on our campus have been making contracts to provide services or render programs in the name of the University for a fee, for which prior approval has not been secured by the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Fiscal Affairs.

This practice is in violation of the accounting and auditing system recommended by the state of North Carolina. I am, therefore, requesting that the Vice Chancellor for Fiscal Affairs check with all persons entering into contractual services, whether on or off campus, where funds are involved, to make sure that special accounts are established so that funds for services may be deposited and accounted for through the Fiscal groups on or off the campus, but we must have a record of the contract as executed and officially signed by the Fiscal Officer and the funds deposited to a special account. All

Office.

This does not mean that we are attempting to repress the desires of departments or organizations on our campus who wish to provide services or programs to alumni or other expenditures from that fund must be accounted for.

This is a very serious matter and I shall appreciate your complete cooperation.

International Focus On Humane Treatment

The killing of 69 Blacks and wounding of over 200 other Black men, women, and children brought an international focus upon the conditions of inhumane treatment by the European-South African government upon the African people in that country.

Twenty-nine African and Asian nations came together and pressured the U.N. Security Council into adopting a resolution stating that the murders in S.A. constituted a threat to international peace and calling for the end of S.A.'s apartheid system and its discriminatory laws. The United States was one of the countries that signed the resolution, while her white allies, Britain and France, voted against it. But this only serves to indicate that the U.S. was more hypocritical than her two friends, because physical support policies of all three countries even escalated after the resolution.

To this information we can begin to compare some of the U.S. expressed opinions that we gather from A&T's diplomat in residence, Dr. William Reed. In an interview by the Register on April 27, 1973, Dr. Reed stated, "The U.S. considers it more important to defer power to the Europeans where Africa is concerned. We do not want to displace their relationship with their former colonies."

But, undoubtedly, Dr. Reed recognizes that the interests and the relationship between the U.S. government and big business are much more similar on an international level than when on a domestic level. Thus the U.S. government and big businesses are in unison in their physical support or non-support of a foreign country.

And, in spite of the U.S. government's signing the resolution opposing S.A., it was big business, and later we'll find the government itself, that kept the South African economy from Africa's biggest monopoly, at the plea of its president, Harry Oppenheimer. Such an extension of confidence by important American interests reversed the tide, and once again foreign capital flowed into South Africa, strengthening the apartheid regime."

"This two-face position by the United States, of officially deploring apartheid while private American interests unrestrainedly pour investments into South Africa that bolster the racist system, has typified American policy for the past decade. It is, in face, precisely you weren't here ahead of us and white folks or you weren't people.

Dr. Reed further states "Africa is not important to the U.S. except for man power." This was obviously the type of erroneous implications that the U.S. government has revealed all along; for the hypocrisy with which they have handled the South African question cannot be justified in the eyesight of colored people of the world in general and Black people of the world in particular. To indicate further American support of the spread of "White Supremacy" in S.A., we can examine the U.S. action concerning the U.N. resolution passed in August of '63 and re-inforced by a stronger resolution in December of the same year.

To quote from Mr. Pomeroy, "Adlai Stevenson, who was then the U.S. delegate to the United Nations, said after the vote that the United States felt that South Africa was failing to carry out its obligations under the UN Charter and that by stopping the sale of arms "We will emphasize our hope that the Republic will now reassess its attitude to apartheid" Stevenson announced that the U.S. would go even further and would ban the export of equipment used in the manufacture of arms."

"What actually happened in the period following this officially-stated American stand? The South African Rand Daily Mail said on November 4, 1969, that between 1962 and 1968 the U.S. delivered weapons worth $45 million to South Africa."

U.S. policy in South Africa is obviously one of support for the White oppressive government and against the aspirations and lives of the African people. But you have to begin to wonder whether we Blacks in America are part of the solution or part of the problem when you weigh Dr. Reed's last observation in last April's interview. "Dr. Reed attributed Africa's slow progress to lack of industrialism."

Since industrialization in the white world has only existed for a little over 125 years and since the colonialization of Africa runs almost parallel with that time-who controlled lack of industrialization in Africa? South Africa was "politically" transformed into a white state; thus it did not suffer from lack of industrialization that plagued colonized Africa.

The more that is understood, the harder it is distinguished between the USA's (Union of South Africa and the United States of America), For Black people the world over, they represent a united effort against our will to be truly free.

CRISIS

By Ted L. Mangum

collapsing during the period immediately following Sharpeville. This can be seen by citing a paragraph from William J. Pomeroy's, Apartheid Axis United States & South Africa:

"In expectation of a possible collapse, capital began to leave the country—$225 million in the month after March 1960—and foreign interests held back from further investment. At this point American bankers extended a $30 million loan to the Anglo-American Corp., South since 1960, while the fascist-style apartheid laws condemned by the United Nations have proliferated in South Africa, that American capital has flooded at an increasing rate into the apartheid state."

Dr. Reed goes on to state that "Interest of the United States in Africa is both old and new; the first people who occupied the U.S. were Europeans and Africans." I'm sorry about that, Indians; but that's just the way Dr. Reed understood it; either

Play Drives Home The Black Experience

By Rosie A. Stevens

"The Blacks." Three sheets of paper have been discarded from the typewriter. Three sheets have failed to capture the violent rage and hatred and frustration of the Black people who paraded across the stage in a tortuous, drawn out ritual dramatizing the unique core of the Black experience.

The old themes were the same. The Black man was wasting his time with a white woman of the lowest possible station in life. He seduced her and killed her.

However, the presentation was different, driving home in a precise and white-hot manner the pain of the man, the guilt and torture of his re-enactment of the scene.

He was forced to endure the taunts of the females and the other males in an effort to preserve their self respect and self esteem.

This was dramatized by the symbolic flogging of Village, played by Junius Leak. The flogging was done by Virtue, played by Donna Chamberlain, after Village played out his love of the forbidden, and his hatred of the white object of his seduction, on Virtue.

Deborah Williams did an excellent job in the role of the wronged and embittered Black woman who is constantly betrayed by her man for someone who is less than she.

The ritual was drawn to the bitter end in human passion which refused to be suppressed and which was in itself a form of hatred.

Interspersed throughout the play were moments of humor to dissipate the intense identification of the audience with the characters on the stage. These moments prevented a bomb from exploding. The play itself was very grim and tense.

Finally, the whites recognized their guilt and agreed to be tried for their sins in a masochistic sort of ritual in which each tried to defend himself or herself.

At the same time some social institutions were being wiped away with the demise of them.

The oppressive law, the hypocritical religion, the perverted manhood, and the singular suffering of the white female who has been repressed into a passive thing of vicarious parasitism, were driven away, done with.

It was a restatement of the opening scene when Snow very slowly blew out the candles of the life of the repressive, inhuman white race, and everything was a good Black.

At the end, it was a time for dancing and rejoicing.

The choreography was good.

Some of the acting has already been commented upon, but it should not have been. The players were all "damn good."

"The Blacks" is a play which definitely has something to say which is relevant to the contemporary scene. It can be seen again and again and again with something fresh to be noted and gained.

The "Whites" in a scene from "The Blacks;" Deborah Hill, Darryl Overby, Thaddeus Henderson.

SPORTS NOTEBOOK

By Blannie Bowen

This is tournament week around the country and some records will be broken, while some of the favorite teams will go home sad and the underdogs will emerge victorious.

A classic example of favorite teams not winning the title occurred in last year's CIAA and MEAC Tournaments. Norfolk State and Maryland-Eastern Shore were the picks to capture the crowns, but A&T and Fayetteville State won the tournament titles.

Maryland is again the favorite for this year's MEAC tournament and the Hawks are out to prove that they can win the big game. Coach John Bates led his team to Durham and was promptly upset by A&T. The Hawks are in the same position this week and are currently ranked as the top team in the NAIA.

UMES finished second in last year's NAIA Tournament, but this year the Hawks are seeking higher fortunes by aspiring for the NCAA crown.

But, due to the fact that UMES is a predominantly Black college, the NAIA and the NCAA are constantly feuding; and the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference (MEAC) has yet to decide on a concrete course of action; the Hawks may never gain an NCAA crown unless the school becomes an independent college such as the University of South Carolina has done.

The fact that the MEAC went on record that there will be no commercial radio or television broadcasts of the tournament is an example of the kind of status and future that the league has with its present leadership.

WBig Radio will carry the A&T games only after some strenuous protesting. While Maryland is caught in the middle of a difficult situation, the players will suffer as well.

Marvin Webster, James Outlaw, Talvin Skinner and many more players are having their basketball futures put into jeopardy because of the lack of MEAC progress.

DANNY COLEMAN WAS THE ONLY wrestler to capture a first place in last week's MEAC Tournament. The Aggie star was impressive in his triumph of the leagues heavyweights. Sorry, Coach Pinckney, but your leader is graduating this May.

First Round MEAC Win Aggies Nip Eagles By One

By Blannie Bowen

BALTIMORE, MD.- North Carolina Central University scored 13 points in the last two minutes and eleven seconds, while A&T hit only three in the first game of the MEAC Tournament here in Baltimore, but A&T scored a 72-71 victory.

A&T now faces the winner of the Morgan-South Carolina State game in Thursday's semi-final rounds, which is Morgan.

The Aggies received their biggest scare of the year when the Eagles scored four unanswered points in 19 seconds to pull within one point of 72-71.

With 13 seconds showing on the clock, A&T received the ball after Robert Little scored three of his 20 points, while completing the three-point play, and then Central stole the ball.

In his anxiety to get down the floor with only six seconds on the clock, Little stepped on the out-of-bounds line, and A&T received the ball and the win, as time expired with Willie Daniels holding the ball in his hands.

A&T led 31-27 at the half behind James Outlaw who totalled 22 points for the game. Despite scoring only seven points in the first half, Bobby Goodwin came on strong in the second stanza to tally 18 points for the evening as the Aggies possessed leads of 15 points on several occasions. With 4:49 showing on the clock, A&T led 65-50 before Central put on a march that stunned the small crowd in the spacious Baltimore Civic Center.

Greensboro native Norman Anderson led the charge as he contributed his game total of seven points during this march.

Coach Warren Reynolds signaled for his patented diamond offense, but Central's full court pressure defense caused numerous Aggie turnovers as the Eagles began to fly up and down the court with steals and easy points.

When Little completed his three-point play, the crowd was stunned as the only MEAC champs nearly collapsed under the pressure.

A&T received a boost when Central's Wesley Johnson was ejected from the game for throwing punches at Len Reliford.

This action caused Morgan State Coach Nate Frazier, who was viewing the action from the sidelines, to ask the referee, "How can you eject a player for throwing punches when his mouth gets bloody?"

But, A&T survived this scare, and now continues on the road toward still being the only MEAC champs.

Intramural Championship

Thunderbirds And Pershing Rifles Win First Round

By Robert Brooks

The Thunderbirds defeated the Brothers 48-38 in the opening game of the Intramural Basketball tournament. Speed again prevailed or height. The game matched four men, each around 5'10" and a 6'6" center against the Brothers that averaged nearly 6'2".

The action was run and gun as the teams traded baskets in the first quarter as each had a hot hand. The Thunderbirds connected on their first five attempts at the basket on route to a 14-8 lead. They increased the lead to 24-14 at the half as Ronald Benjamin and Larry Faison combined for 14 of those points.

The teams played on even terms for the remainder of the game, each scoring 24 points.

The brothers came within five points at one point in the fourth period behind the hot hand of "Skeeter" Kimber. Kimber hit five consecutive baskets at one point, but Greg Bell countered with two jumpers and Ronald Platt had a three point play to push the margin back up to 10 points. Kimber fouled out of the contest with 1:30 remaining.

For the Thunderbirds, Larry Faison paved the way with 12 points while Benjamin had 10 and about a dozen blocked shots. Kimber was the only player in double figures for the Brothers with the game honors of 16 points.

The second game the PR's versus the Grooves was ruled no contest.
