DeLauder Replaces Sullivan

By Sidney Marable

At the end of the fall semester of 1974, Dr. Walter Binford Conley answered. "The condition of society are the reasons." He stated that teachers can help solve the problem by understanding how serious it is and by deciding that they will do something about it.

Conley said, "This makes for poor relationships among the institutions. Ripping them off is not the answer." He concluded, "Students are the primary source of action and they must look into the problem and do something about it. The library will welcome a student's action in a number of plays presented in the Paul Robeson Little Theatre.

The Wallace, N.C., native had performed in the Otis Piper Player's production of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? and "Marat/Sade." She was also elected Mrs. Junior. In addition to acting, Lorey also directed "Medea" in her senior year at A&T.

"The River Niger" is a realistic family drama, firmly rooted in the contemporary Black experience but with a universality that distills the fears, appetites, frustrations, and vulnerabilities of the entire human family.

Johnny Williams, Harlem house painter, poet, devoted husband, father, and friend, is the central figure of the play. Johnny's quest for a battlefield on which to fight for the rights of all Black men is countered by his son Jeff's demand for individuality and self-expression within society's bounds.

The play opens with Jeff's homecoming from military service and develops around the notion of tensions between generation, sexes, comrades, and philosophies. Within the context of dramatic and human confrontation, the stunning vitality and integrity of each individual and of the family as a whole in this powerful work forge possibilities for reconciliation among hearts and minds.
Produce Or Ship Out

For the many veterans who depend on the veterans' office and the post office on campus for responsibility of handling their money, a large majority of veterans are highly disappointed with the service that has been offered to them.

First of all, there are too many people in these positions that are passing the responsibility for making sure that the checks are picked up and prompt distribution of the checks is effectively handled.

In talking with the head personnel at the main post office, the break-down concerning the veterans' checks is concentrated on our campus somewhere between our post office pick-up system and the veterans' office in East Hall.

The image that is projected to the community and to the new veterans, is one of deep concern and proper vocational guidance for the veterans.

The reality that exists, or is projected, is one of unconcern and laissez-faire attitudes.

There have been statements made that the veterans at A&T are not going to, or continue to be subjected to inadequate and erroneous mismanagement of the government subsistence, that they are rightfully entitled to.

With the conditions of the economy and the various liabilities that each individual veteran bears, be it rent payments, Duke Power payments, or adequate food supplies for his family or himself, these people who show no concern or just wait for other organizations to do their work, some veterans are saying, either produce or shipout!!

The old cliche is still true: people act funny when you play around with their money.

Education May Become A Luxury

By Rosie A. Stevens

Duke University's response to the dearth of funds is an interesting one. Rather than raise student fees, they chose to eliminate a program or two and to solicit funds from old patients at the medical center. The reason for this response, a loss of approximately fifty million dollars in funds and investments, has some repercussions likely to be felt by many who are entering that university and other private and state supported institutions.

On the undergraduate and graduate levels, enrollment seems very likely to shrink rather than grow. This fact seems to be stemming from the current economic situation, one that is steadily worsening. Money is so tight so that many people will choose options other than education at the post-secondary level. As one person has expressed it, education would become a luxury.

At the same time fees for higher education will be forced up by a sky-rocketing inflation, further discouraging people from attending school. Then there is the factor of financial aid becoming increasingly less as university endowments, coming mainly from investments, are being inflated even in any manner you choose to observe the attendance. Baltimore is a sorry, sand-wiring city for colleges because of the professional atmosphere and the interest in professional teams.

Duran was a little bit better and there are no professional teams to compete against the colleges. According to the rules upon which the MEAC was established, the venture as the MEAC has failed.

Some MEAC officials are beginning to see the future possibility and are looking for new heights to conquer. Players from MEAC teams consistently fail to make the grade as professionals. Most of the conference's problems center on poor leadership and planning. Conference rules and goals are constantly violated without penalties being assessed against the violators.

Instances where Morgan's Marvin Webster was "given" the Tournament's most valuable player over A&T's Allen Spruill do not help the image of the conference.

Poor officiating in the Delaware-Morton game was allowed in order for Webster and Morgan to play A&T in the finals to draw fans. Webster was awarded the MVP to enhance his national recognition as the nation's top player.

There is now maim of a tournament next year between the Major College NCAA Division I MEAC champion against the Small College NCAA Division II MEAC Champion.

The MEAC takes one step forward and one step backward. It looks as though the backward steps are taking precedent now.
Johnson Leads Aggie Attack

By Craig Turner

A&T opened the semifinal action in last week's MEAC basketball tournament with a 92-87 victory over Hampton at the Fayed.Ville State Tournament. The Aggies won their third straight MEAC title, and advanced to the MEAC championship game against Morgan State.

Sinclair Colbert, a graduate of Fayed.Ville State, said he was all for the victory. "It was a great day for us. We were ready to play." Colbert said A&T's early play was the key, as they were able to shut down Hampton's offense and limit their scoring opportunities. Colbert added that the team's defense had been the key to their success, as they were able to force turnovers and create opportunities for themselves on the offensive end.

MEAC-GLAA Will Clash Next Year In Tourney

By Benjamin Forbes

For the past two years, the MEAC Basketball Tournament has been held in Baltimore, Md. The tournament had been held in Durham, N.C., for the past 15 years. The tournament will move to Dallas, Texas, for the next two years.

Black College conferences in the area, the MEAC and the CIAA, will continue to hold separate tournaments. Next year's MEAC tournament will involve the two most prominent Black College conferences in the area, the MEAC and the CIAA. Most of the fans seem to feel that the two conferences have a shot at playing a championship game. The game will be held in the Civic Center of the Civic Center of the city. The MEAC Tournament will be played on the MEAC's home court, while the CIAA Tournament will be played on the CIAA's home court.

Tours of the persons except for one area, the MEAC and the CIAA. The teams will play a total of four games in each tournament, and the team with the best record will advance to the MEAC championship game.

The MEAC Tournament will be played from March 13-15, while the CIAA Tournament will be played from March 16-18.

Jubilant Aggies Take Crown

By Blannie Brown

Nothing but smiles, cheers, chants and chants, "Aggies are number one," could be heard Saturday night in Baltimore's Civic Center as the MEAC Championship was awarded to A&T State. The Aggies defeated Morgan State 70-65 to win the MEAC Tournament.

Early in the contest, A&T State's forward Ron Johnson scored a basket and a foul shot to give the Aggies a 4-0 lead. Morgan State's forward Ray Perry answered with a basket and a foul shot to tie the game at 4-4.

With only 45 seconds left in the first half, Morgan State's guard Raymond Harrison scored a basket and a foul shot to give the Cowboys a 32-30 lead. A&T State's guard Jerald Glover answered with a basket and a foul shot to tie the game at 32-32.

In the second half, A&T State's guard Allen Spruill scored a basket and a foul shot to give the Aggies a 42-41 lead. Morgan State's forward Ray Perry answered with a basket and a foul shot to tie the game at 42-42.

With only 16 seconds left in the game, A&T State's center Gerard Glover scored a basket and a foul shot to give the Aggies a 58-56 lead. Morgan State's guard Ray Perry answered with a basket and a foul shot to tie the game at 58-58.

In the final seconds of the game, A&T State's guard Allen Spruill scored a basket and a foul shot to give the Aggies a 70-65 lead. Morgan State's guard Ray Perry answered with a basket and a foul shot to tie the game at 70-70.

Spruill Freaks Past "The Big Dummy"

When Webster's name was called to receive the Tournament's Most Valuable Player award, Spruill smiled again. His smiling face could not reveal his thoughts, nor his emotions.

The crowd booed heartily as its hero Spruill accepted a grave setback with pride and dignity. Voting for the "MVP" was done at the half of this contest and Spruill had only eight points to Webster's seven.

More importantly, voting was also done spanning the previous games where Webster played three to only two for Spruill. Why then was the crowd upset because Spruill did not get the MVP?

From a 36-30 A&T lead at the half, things fell into place for the New Bern star. Imagine Spruill "freaking" and scoring 15 of the first 19 Aggie points in the second half. As he came out of his bag of moves, Spruill ripped 11 straight points for A&T from 16:27 to 8:31 for a 51-46 Aggie lead. Spruill got all of A&T's points in this stretch.

During the last eight minutes, Spruill scored eight more points and collected seven of his 10 rebounds. As super as Spruill was, it took a team-effort to beat the Bears.

Spruill collected 29 for the game, hitting 14 of 26 shots while Sparrow and Johnson collected 18 and eight, respectively. A&T Coach Warren Reynolds was voted the top coach while Spruill, Johnson and Webster joined teammates Shepherd and Fred Simmons of Delaware State on the All-Tournament team.

When things get close, hits at 33, 59,61 and 63, it was James Sparrow, Raymond Perry, Sinclair Colbert, Stanley Parham, and Ron Johnson who combined with Spruill on baseline and other perfectly executed drives to win the title.

Eight straight points by Jethro Crum kept Morgan in the game, but Sparrow, Colbert and Spruill hit for seven as the clock ran out.

Webster scored 13 and collected 21 rebounds, but he only hit six of 15 shots as Colbert and collapsing teammates kept the 7-1 giant busy and out of position. Billy Newton hit 17 for Morgan as Crum got 12.

Spruill collected 29 for the game, hitting 14 of 26 shots while Sparrow and Johnson collected 18 and eight, respectively.

A&T Coach Warren Reynolds was voted the top coach while Spruill, Johnson and Webster joined teammates Shepherd and Fred Simmons of Delaware State on the All-Tournament team.

As Webster received a goal-leading call, following a Spruill driving lay-up, one Washington Post reporter remarked, "Just look at that big dummy (Webster). Spruill has used him all night long. I can't believe Spruill has done this to him."
