THE A&T REGISTER

"COMPLETE AWARENESS FOR COMPLETE COMMITMENT"

VOLUME XLI NUMBER 20 NORTH CAROLINA AGRICULTURAL AND TECHNICAL STATE UNIVERSITY GREENSBORO, NC FRIDAY NOVEMBER 16, 1979

Rockwell International Receives $10,000 Award

Rockwell International, a major United States corporation, received a $10,000 award for service to higher education, and then turned the funds over to A&T State University's School of Engineering.

Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, chancellor of A&T, received the grant at special ceremonies in Pittsburgh on last Thursday.

The CIT Foundation first awarded the funds to Rockwell for the corporation's contributions to the field of higher education. Rockwell then agreed to donate the funds to A&T in order to enhance the university's Rockwell Solid State Electronic Laboratory.

"Rockwell was very honored by the award," said Arthur H. Muir, manager of commercial and university programs for Rockwell's Science Center, "and we are particularly delighted that the award is going to A&T's laboratory."

Dowdy called the grant

"another important indication of industry's growing confidence and support of our academic programs. We sincerely need and appreciate this kind of support. The Rockwell Laboratory was opened at A&T in 1977. Grants by Rockwell and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration funded the laboratory, designed to function as a center of excellence in the field of solid state electronics, and to provide trained minorities for sophisticated research.

Since its inception, the laboratory has been involved in efforts to develop more efficient solar cells.

Dr. Suresh Chandra, dean of the A&T School of Engineering, said the university is currently involved in five significant research projects in solid state electronics. These projects are being funded by Rockwell, NASA, the U.S. Department of Energy, the National Science Foundation and Sandia Laboratories of Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Stocking up for the cold months ahead.

100 Students

To Attend Science Symposium

More than 100 students researchers from North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and Washington, D.C. will participate in the fourth annual Mid-Atlantic Regional Minority Biomedical Support Symposium Friday, November 16, at A&T State University.

The sessions will be held in Barnes Hall beginning at 8 a.m.

The A&T seminar is one of several being held on various campuses and sponsored by a grant from the National Institutes of Health.

Dr. Richard Bennett, director of the Minority Biomedical Support program at A&T, said the program is designed to give scientists at minority institutions an opportunity to become involved in research and also to provide Black students with research experience.

"This symposium will give the students an opportunity to present research findings to their peers.

They will enjoy that academic edge of having actually been in a scientific meeting."

Speakers for the symposium will include Dr. James Townsel of the University of Alabama in Birmingham.

Townsel will speak on "Synaptic Biochemistry," while Glickson's topic will be

"NMR Studies of the Interaction of Bleomycin with Metals and Nucleic Acids."

Colleges to be represented in the symposium will be A&T, North Carolina Central University, S.C. State College, Johnson C. Smith University and Shaw University.

The Minority Biomedical Support Program was first organized four years ago.

Chandra Favors Nuclear Energy

"The use of nuclear energy should not be abandoned and I don't agree with the environmentalists who are saying that we should shut down nuclear plants," the dean of the A&T State University School of Engineering told a state-wide meeting Wednesday.

In a luncheon address to the 24th North Carolina Symposium and exhibition for electrical and electronics engineers, Dr. Suresh Chandra said:

"I am in favor of the use of nuclear energy with greater safe-guards because some of the newer sources of energy are not yet at hand," said Chandra, who also serves as national president of the national mechanical engineering honorary society, Pi Tau Sigma.

Chandra told the more than 100 professional engineers and engineering students in the coliseum that engineers must begin taking advantage of their new credibility with the public.

"In the late 1960's, engineers did not have a great deal of credibility," he said, "and we were blamed with pollution, noise, war and even crime. Now people have started believing that you have got to depend on engineers for technology and for solutions to those problems."

Chandra said the nation cannot continue to consume energy at the present level.

"Conservation is something which the engineers will have to emphasize, not just the politicians," he added. "We must also turn to alternative sources of energy like solar energy and nuclear energy."

The symposium was organized by a statewide committee of engineers chaired by Dr. Winsor E. Alexander, chairman of the Electrical Engineering Department at A&T.

Other A&T professors with key roles in the conference were Dr. Elias Stefanakos, Dr. Ward Collis and Dr. Chung Yu, and Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, chancellor.

Wahl To Speak Here Nov. 19

Dr. Ray Wahl, a nationally prominent writer and speaker in the area of industrial safety, will present a lecture at A&T State University Monday, November 19, at 6 p.m. in Room 108 of Price Hall. The lecture is open to the public.

Wahl's presentation will be on "Rules, Regulations and Cases of Non-Compliance of the Occupational Safety and Health Act."

An outstanding educator and public servant, Wahl was formerly employed by the U.S. Department of Labor. While in that position, he wrote many of the rules and regulations that presently are a part of the Occupational Safety and Health Standards.

He has written widely in the field, and he is a professor emeritus of vocational education at the Pennsylvania

State University. Wahl also taught for 30 years in various secondary schools.

His lecture at A&T is being sponsored by the Division of Industrial Education and Technology at A&T. The university recently initiated a new academic program in occupational safety and health.

The program is directed by Dr. Isaac Barnett.

Animal Science

Club To Sponsor Pet Show

By Florina G. Byrd

The Animal Science Club at A&T has proposed a tentative pet show in January.

Velveeta Bell, president of the club, stated that the competition will be open to Greensboro residents who own domestic pets.

"We will allow a time limit for those persons interested in registering their pets for the show. The registration fee will be $2. Judges will be faculty members in the Animal Science Department. Ribbons will be awarded to the winners," said Bell.

SNEA

Aims For More Members

By Trudy Johnson

"We have 123 SNEA members now, but we hope to have 150 members by November 27 deadline," said Estell Harper, SNEA advisor.

For the 1979-80 school term, the Student National Education Association's executive members are Sabrina Hunter, president and Miss SNEA; Gwen Morrissey, vice-president; Valerie Lewis, treasurer; Demetria Staton, secretary; Linda Price, assistant secretary; Sharon Robinson, reporter.

The monthly meetings, usually held in Hodgin Auditorium on the second Wednesday of the month, were changed to the third Wednesday at the last meeting.

Projects underway thus far include selling candies and SNEA tee-shirts. A new project was proposed at the last meeting to order and sell membership pins.

The SNEA's deadline for State Voting Membership is November 27. The official deadline to join the Aggie Chapter is December 10. For those officially enrolled as state members, one vote is allowed for every seven members.

The SNEA membership fee is $12. An additional dollar was charged for those wishing to take chapter pictures.

One of the main purposes for the organization is to help students get jobs in their areas of specialization after college.

In the upcoming months, proposed projects are a campus clean-up day, and educational guest speakers, besides ones scheduled for the education seminars. When the guest speakers are featured, neighboring colleges are also invited.

Other plans for the club will be a Christmas banquet and a trip to the Asheboro zoo. These events will take place in December.

According to Bell, the Animal Science Club was organized on 1970 under the directorship of Talmage Brewer. During that time, there were about ten members; but, through the years, the club has acquired more members.

Bell put a strong emphasis on those animal science and other related majors who have not shown any concern for the organization.

"This club is not only for animal science majors. Students who are majoring in biology, chemistry and other related fields in the School of Agriculture are welcome to join.

Bell commented on the lack of concern many students show toward the organization.

"Some students are not taking advantage of becoming members of the club, especially those students who are in this field of study.

When a student does not join a club or organization that is affiliated with his or her major, that student is somewhat defeating his purpose of exercising responsibilities and concern for himself and the university," she said.

"Students should become active in clubs and organizations because it will enhance the knowledge and the awareness of their chosen career. It also helps them to communicate with their peers," she concluded.

Officers of the Animal Science Club are Velveeta Bell, president; Sharon Spurlock, vice-president; Caroldez Douglas, secretary; and Thomasena Maxwell, treasurer. Faculty advisors are Joe Grier, and Dr. George Johnson.

Hair-cutting Franchisers Hire Women

By John R. Brincefield III

Traditional male-dominated barber shops may be giving way to women. Hair-cutting franchisers are projecting good growth and are hiring career-women.

Not everyone is happy with the trend, however. "They're just unisex beauty shops with non-barber owners and most of them hire only cosmetologists, not barbers," said a spokesman for the Associated Masters Barber and Beauticians, a trade group. But the return on investment is good.

Gate City Barber Shop, Greensboro, has a woman barber employed. Pearl Reaves, petite, 27-year-old mother of one, has been in the profession since 1966.

"When I began to seriously think about a career during my senior year in high school, I wanted something with innovation and a definite challenge," she explains. "Coming from a family of thirteen children, I had an older sister that was a successful barber already. So I just naturally followed suit."

"I enrolled in Durham's Barber School and later went on to cut hair at Fort Bragg, Fort Campbell, Kentucky, Winston-Salem, and now Greensboro," she said.

"In fact, I met my husband in the barber shop. At first he didn't exactly favor my decision. His male ego was slightly wounded; but, after thirteen years in a reasonably secure profession, he seems quite pleased," Reaves added.

The shop, which is located across from A&T State University, offers many different styles of hair-cuts. When asked about the male reactions to a woman barber, she remarked, "At first they will come in and observe my style of cutting. After a few visits they become my regular customers," she quipped.

Wesley Begins Assistance To Aid Cambodians

Edwin J. Wesley, chairman of CARE, which has begun emergency assistance to uprooted Cambodians flew to Bangkok, Thailand, to confer with U.S. and other government officials and with his own organization's task force which "has been there getting aid delivery underway."

"They have now determined that we can effectively conduct a major relief and rehabilitation program for the victims," Wesley announced today. "Therefore, CARE is launching a special, crucial drive to raise $5 million from donations by the general public to help end the searing agony and save the endangered men, women and children."

An excellent conversationalist also, Reaves has an instinctive knack for recognizing the mood of her patrons. "Men are such big boys. Some are just plain sullen and moody, and that's when I go into my act. By the time I have finished their haircut, they are laughing and talking all over the place."

Jeff Martin, a Newark, New Jersey, student, had a very positive attitude about Reaves's tonsorial ability. "She gives a better hair-cut than the male barber. Whenever I feel like painting the town red, I'll make sure I'm sporting a fresh hair-cut done by Pearl."

Despite the present tight money situation, Reaves offers some unusual insight into the business trend of the haircut. "Since we specialize in the Black haircut, there seems to be a growing awareness among the Black men to be well groomed regardless of how hard times get," she said. "They continue to come in and demand the styles, regardless of prices, which will enhance their appearance, and I call that smart shopping."

When asked about the various styles that are in demand, she said "The fad-away seems to be the biggie. It's a style that has a thicker crop of hair at the top of the head with a close trim around the ears and neck. Mostly these are cuts for the college men across the street. And they just love it."

Although Pearl Reaves may not hold the traditional woman's job, she had this added comment. "If I had to find employment elsewhere, I would rather move back home to Mt. Olive, N.C., and open up a restaurant. That way, I could still meet interesting people and improve upon my second hobby-cooking."

Les Notes

Special edition by Trudy Johnson

If journalism is the art of writing, then "discography" is the art of disco!

Because of Diana Ross' musical array since her high school days, her super-stardom has been compared to Liza Minnelli and Barbara Streisand, according to Connie Berman. The author of Diana Ross-Supreme Lady has presented a 1978 biography of the professional accounts of Ross.

The ghetto, Detroit, Michigan-born, 35-year-old Aries has recorded albums from 1963 to the present, with her latest being "The Boss."

She has recorded as one of the Supremes, lead singer of the Supremes, with the Temptations, with Marvin Gaye, and as a solo artist.

To complement her musical nature, her roles as Billie Holiday and Tracey Chambers have made her internationally known. The two roles (lead roles) are from the movies "Lady Sings The Blues" and "Mahogany."

In her latest movie, "The Wiz," she played the role of Dorothy, but her popularity here was not that of her first two movies. For one thing, some critics thought she was too old to play the role, but it did not stop her.

The Supremes. The original ones are Mary Wilson, Diana Ross and Florence Ballard. Their recordings (albums) are from 1963-1967. Listed are "Meet the Supremes," "Where Did Our Love Go," "A Bit of Liverpool," "Country Western and Pop," "More Hits by The Supremes," "We Remember Sam Cooke," and several others.

Diana Ross and The Supremes. The albums are from 1967-1974. Listed are "Greatest Hits," "Reflections," "Funny Girl," "Live at London's Talk of the Town," "Love Child," "Let the Sunshine In," "Cream of the Crop," "Right On!"

Others are "Greatest Hits Vol. 3.," "Farewell," "Motown Story," "Anthology."

Diana Ross & The Supremes and the Temptations. The albums are from 1968-69. Listed are "Diana Ross & The Supremes Join The Temptations," "TCB," "Together," and "On Broadway."

Diana Ross and Marvin Gaye. The albums are from 1974-1975. Listed are "Diana And Marvin," "Dis-o-tech Vol. 3."

Diana Ross, Solo artist. The albums are from 1970-1979. Listed are "Diana Ross," "Diana-(Soundtrack)," "Surrender," "Everything Is Everything," "Lady Sings The Blues (Soundtrack)," "Touch Me In The Morning," "Live At Caesar's Palace."

Others are "Last Time I Saw Him," "Motown Christmas," "Mahogany (Soundtrack)," "Diana Ross-Vol. 2," "Greatest Hits," "Dis-o-tech Vol. 4," "An Evening With Diana Ross," "Baby, It's Me," "DIANA-(Television Special)."

Concluding the list are "Love Hangover," "Diana Ross' Greatest Hits," "The Wiz-(Soundtrack)," and "The Boss."

On a closing note, remember "Success is nothing, without the one you love to share it with"-taken from "Mahogany," the movie.

Where Are The Leaders?

Our SGA president has once again stood up for a cause that he believes in, The Coalition for Human Dignity. They are allegedly to march Sunday at 1:30 in a response against the Klan and the Worker's Party Organization.

For those students who are attentive watchers of the news media, you would have known about Buncum's stand on the incident which occurred approximately two weeks ago.

This Coalition for Human Dignity is trying to get the Black community, according to Buncum, to release some tension after the shooting. The Coalition feels that Blacks in the meantime have become so very much disgusted with what the WPO and the Klan have produced that they feel something should be done. They did not appreciate the attack by the Klan, and the WPO and making it look as if the Blacks are greatly responsible.

Buncum also felt that this is not the 60's and the Klan should not just come into a Black neighborhood and shoot up things as they please.

But, their march was cancelled because the coalition could not get the "so-called Black leaders for support". There was no response like they wanted, so the march was cancelled.

The march scheduled for Sunday at 1:30 was intended as a crying out of the Black community as to how we have become involved in something we know very little about. Everyone is seeking answers, and moral support. But, according to the Coalition, our Black leaders did not respond for support.

If to them this is a minor issue, and the leaders we depend on to lead us in the Black community do not rally to support the cause, what will happen if they are needed for more than just a march?

Be Proud To Be An Aggie

By Larry L. Jenkins

An editorial written by the editor-in-chief of The Campus Echo, which appears on the opposite page, expresses concern over the rivalry between A&T and North Carolina Central.

Though many unpleasant confrontations have been witnessed between the two schools, the article written by the editor-in-chief does in no way ease the path so that positive relations may exist between the two schools.

Stating that "Central had a reputation of being a very elite and sophisticated institution...", while referring to A&T as the school "that many Central rejects were accepted" at only causes more animosity and could possibly become the triggering factor that causes continued unpleasantness.

Mr. Revelle should take heed to his own statement when he comments that the "two Black universities should boast pride, unity, and academic excellence and be an example for the other universities." The editorial written by him showed none of the above characteristics at any school, or person, should possess.

This editorial is not meant to attack or defend statements made by Mr. Revelle, for everyone can judge for himself/herself the programs and accreditations that both schools have achieved.

As a leader one must demonstrate leadership—the type that others will want to learn and develop. One should not degrade others while recognizing his/her own success, when in essence it could possibly be fabrication.

A&T students attending the game Saturday should reveal the characteristics that Mr. Revelle feels that is lacking among the two schools. As adults, everyone should act accordingly revealing that 'Aggie Pride' to the Eagles of North Carolina Central.

Be Thankful; Say A Prayer

By Florina G. Byrd

In another week students will be leaving this university in observance of the Thanksgiving holiday. Students, how will you spend your vacation? Will you be studious or will you use this time for relaxation?

Whatever your plans for this vacation, please don't forget to take a few minutes of your time to give a special thanks for being blessed to see another Thanksgiving holiday. There is one thing that must be kept in mind—don't wait until Thanksgiving to show appreciation.

Each day you awaken you should be thankful that through God's goodness you were spared to see another day. Thanksgiving is not just another holiday when you eat turkey and dressing; it's that special day when you should give an extra thanks for being blessed to be alive.

In retrospect, you should begin each day with a prayer of gratitude. For those of you who have somewhat strayed away from your religion and don't know how to pray, refer to the Bible and read the Lord's Prayer. Those of you who have doubts and may not believe in a Supreme Being greater than yourself, why don't you ask yourself where are your life, health and strength coming from.

Students, have a safe and very pleasant Thanksgiving holiday!

N.C. Central, N.C. A&T Arch Rivals For Years

By Larry D. Revelle
Editor-In-Chief
NCCU Campus Echo

North Carolina Central University and North Carolina A&T State University have been arch rivals for years. One may always expect to see pre-game, half-time and post-game fights whenever the two teams meet.

It was once thought that the games between the two schools might have to be cancelled because of the meanness and animosity displayed.

Why, one may ask, does this hostility exist? Why did the Aggies steal the Eagle mascot one year and the Eagles steal the Aggie mascot the next year? Some believe the two schools became arch rivals all in fun because Central and A&T are the two largest and most talked about Black Universities in the state and are less than an hour's drive apart. Others believe there was a definite origin in the battle. One answer to the strong rivalry follows.

Especially in the early 1900's, Central had a reputation of being a very elite and sophisticated institution which graduated some of the best lawyers, businessmen, and politicians in the country.

A prestigious institution such as Central could not afford to accept just anybody who wanted to matriculate in a big-name, rich, upperclass and highly touted school. Naturally Central had to reject some students.

It is believed that many Central rejects were accepted at A&T. This may have been one of the factors which caused Central and A&T to become arch rivals.

Central has a very rich culture. It was the first Black state-supported liberal arts university in the United States. All the well-to-do, upper class and business-minded students went to Central while most of the agricultural, farming, and trade students went to A&T since that's what it was designed for. It was only natural for a rivalry to grow out of the two schools.

Central has always stood out among the five historically Black Universities in North Carolina. The other four Black schools in the state were established to learn for the sake of doing. They are oriented toward agriculture, technology or teacher education. But Central is the only Black school in the UNC system that has been oriented toward the liberal arts since its inception. Central became an unusual University which said Blacks could learn for the sake of doing.

NCCU is often referred to as the Black UNC while A&T is often referred to as the Black N.C. State.

The rivalry between the two Black schools should only be taken so far. We are intelligent collegians and should not claim one school is better than the other because that is childish.

Both NCCU and A&T are two of the country's leading Black Universities. Both institutions have an indefinite list of honors and therefore have reason to be proud.

The three freshmen at A&T who started a national trend by staging a sit-in at Woolworth's department store to protest desegregation are to be commended for their concern and courage. A&T can be proud of its renown alumni such as Jesse Jackson of Operation Push and Dr. Ronald E. McNair, the country's first Black astronaut.

NCCU can be proud of its students that held sit-ins at Woolworth's here in Durham the same time A&T students were holding theirs.

Central's distinguished alumni include: Ernie Barnes, artist for the CBS comedy GOOD TIMES; Ivan Dixon, renown play-wright and star in HOGANS HEROES; Maynard Jackson, one of the first Black big city mayors (Atlanta, Ga.); Shirley Caesar, renown Black gospel singer; and Sam Jones, formerly of the Boston Celtics.

North Carolina's two largest Black Universities should boast pride, unity and academic excellence and be an example for the other universities.

There's just no room for animosity and jealousy!

Elliott Moffitt

Director Of Bennett's Theatre

By Anthony Johnson

Elliott Moffitt started his career as a soul singer after off Broadway, television, motion pictures, and a masters in drama from New York University. Moffitt returns to Greensboro as director of the theatre at Bennett College.

As James Taylor's music played in the background, Moffitt said, "After seeing Sidney Poitier in 'Lillies of the Field,' I knew that I could do that," even though he was but 19 years old.

Moffitt is a graduate of A&T with a BA in professional theatre.

"I went into theatre because every other endeavor seemed a large bore. In the theatre you are a product of what you can do. No one can make you good."

While at A&T, Moffitt appeared in 'Tambourines to Glory' as Big Eyed Boddy Lomax, 'The Emperor Jones' as Brutus Jones, 'The Rainmaker' as Starbuck, 'Fiddler on the Roof' as Motez, and many other characters under the direction of Dr. John Marshall Kilimanjaro, director of theatre at A&T. During his era at A&T, he directed 'Uncle Toms' and 'Short Eyes'. He received his BA in 1976 and continued on to graduate school at New York University where he majored in Drama. During this time he was the director of a drama program at Ramapo College in New Jersey for one year and also directed four of his original creations at NYU. In February of 1979, Moffitt received his Master's degree.

Throughout his career he has appeared off Broadway in 'The Battle of Angels' as Loon, 'Dionysos Wants You' as Zeus, 'The Boston Party at Annre Mae's House' as La Mama, and 'Salted Arrows' as the Nazi; on television, in 'Boys in the Band' an N.E.T.

In motion pictures, he played 'The Gambler' as a basketball player, 'Amazing Grace' as a student activist, and in 'Abby,' the story of a possessed woman, in which he played Deacon Russell.

Moffitt advises anyone going into theatre that "One needs talent and a great deal of training in speech and acting. It's mentally tough and one has to prepare himself for many rejections. For example out of a hundred auditions, you may get only ten call backs, and out of these only two job offers," he stated.

As director of the theatre at Bennett College, Moffitt said, "I want discipline from my actors."

His first attempts in directing are the 'Sirens' and the 'Owl Killers' which are one act plays being presented November 14-18. He expects these plays to be "a raging success."

NOW YOU CAN EARN OVER $6,500 WITH ARMY ROTC.

Before you graduate from college! Because now, you can combine service in the Army Reserve or National Guard with Army ROTC. It's called the Simultaneous Membership Program (SMP). And, depending on your academic year when you enter, SMP can help you earn over $6,500.

Here's how it works. If you qualify and a vacancy is available, you become a member of an Army Reserve or National Guard unit as an officer trainee and, at the same time, enroll in the Army ROTC advanced course at your college. Your Reserve or Guard membership will pay you at the minimum level of Sergeant E-5, and you'll receive $100 a month during the regular school year as an Army ROTC advanced course cadet.

At the end of your second year of advanced ROTC, you'll be commissioned a second lieutenant and, assuming there's a vacancy, serve with a Guard or Reserve unit while you complete the requirements for your college degree. Upon graduation, you may continue service with a Guard or Reserve unit while pursuing your civilian career, or you can, if you prefer, compete for active duty as an Army officer.

So if you'd like to earn over $6,500 while you're still in college, get into SMP. Because SMP can help you do it. You can bank on it!

A&T's two game-winning streaks against North Carolina Central will be on the line Saturday when the Aggies entertain the Eagles in Greensboro's War Memorial Stadium.

The Eagles will invade Greensboro with a 2-7-1 record. Last week they went down to defeat at the hands of the Howard Bison by a score of 31-20.

Saturday's game climaxes A&T's worst season since its emergence in the MEAC. The Aggies' worst record to date in the MEAC was in 1973, when they finished 4-6-1. The season is over for Coach McKinley's team as far as post-season action, but the Aggie-Eagle confrontation is more than a game; it's a fight where both teams hate each other and the winning school has bragging rights for a year.

There is more significance placed on this year's battle with the Eagles. This game will be the final match up between the schools as members of the MEAC. NCCU has decided to leave the conference in favor of the CIAA and NCAA Division II status. The Aggies will remain in the MEAC and continue to participate at an NCAA Division I level.

 In wrestling action, Coach Mel Pinckney's Aggies host the Aggie Invitational Wrestling Tournament Saturday in the New Gym. The Aggies were scheduled to wrestle in Pembroke last Saturday, but lack of funds made it impossible for them to make the trip. The Aggie Invitational provides talent from schools in North Carolina and Virginia. The teams competing Saturday will be Campbell, Elizabeth City State, Norfolk State, Elon, Hampton Institute, Liberty Baptist, Catawba, Pembroke State, WSSU, and, of course, A&T.

Coach Pinckney is optimistic about his team's chances and he even predicted how he thought the tournament would wind-up, something most coaches refuse to do. Coach Pinckney predicted the top four teams to be Liberty Baptist, Pembroke, A&T, and then Norfolk State.

 The Aggiette basketball team travels to Bowling Springs Tuesday to play Gardner-Webb. This will be the season-opener for the Aggiettes, who are anticipating a successful season.

Mamie Jones, last year's MVP, is currently injured and it's doubtful the talented New Bern native can return to action in time for Tuesday's contest. Last year this loss would have hurt tremendously; but, with the addition of some talented freshmen plus returning lettermen, the Aggiettes are so deep they should overcome the loss of Jones.

 I've been thinking hard about this week's prediction, especially since it's my last. The last three contests between the schools have been relatively close. The Aggies were sporting excellent records at the time, while the Eagles were struggling to stay out of the cellar, which indicates N.C.C.U. was usually more motivated for the game.

The Aggies must not let that be the case Saturday because A&T's not the powerful team it once was. Getting to the point, Coach Jim McKinley has never lost to an Eagle club, but there's a first time for everything.

Aggies Meet Eagles Saturday

By Raymond Moody

In War Memorial Stadium Saturday, N.C. A&T and N.C.C.U. compete in what has traditionally been one of the most exciting games in the history of North Carolina football. This game usually attracts crowds from almost every area in North Carolina. The competition is even no matter which club supposedly has the superior team. In an Aggie-Eagle clash, anything can happen. In other words, throw away the record books.

This rivalry, which began many years ago, has N.C.C.U. with a slight advantage, leading 23-21-4. Central dominated in the mid-60's and early 70's. But the Aggies have won three of their last four games. The Eagles won in 1976, 17-16, on a very controversial field goal in the final seconds of the game. Last year A&T's Charlie Sutton displayed one of the finest running shows of any back in the state, ripping N.C.C.U.'s defense for 243 yards as A&T won 17-13.

Coaching the Eagles is Henry Lattimore. Lattimore, who was named "Coach of the Year" in the MEAC while at Morgan State, is in his first year at the school. Assisting Lattimore are two A&T graduates. Robert "Stonewall" Jackson, who coaches the tackles and tight-ends, is a member of the A&T State University Sports Hall of Fame, All-CIAA, Little All-American Honoree, a winner of the Jack Dempsey Hat Award and a former member of the N.Y. Giants pro-football team.

George Suggs coaches the linebackers. Suggs played linebacker and defensive back for A&T from 1969-1972. He was the 1972 winner of the A&T Outstanding Senior Award in Football.

Charles Yuille leads the team on the field at quarterback, where he possesses a good throwing arm and is considered a fine scrambler by opposing players. Yuille will be throwing to his favorite receiver in Carl Sanders. Sanders could be the most gifted receiver in the MEAC. If Yuille has time to throw, it will be a very interesting afternoon for the Aggie secondary.

When the Eagles run, look for Anthony Judd to carry the ball. Judd, at 5-9, 209, is a bulldozing runner, who, as a freshman last year, rushed for 411 yards. The offensive line is strong and experienced, with five seniors starting. But it remains to be seen whether the Eagle line can contain Byrd and Company.

Defensively, the Eagles are relatively sound with veteran tackles Ken Ramsey, Terry Brown, and ends Greg Wylly and Gary Harris. They have talent, but seem a little inexperienced to contain the running of quarterback Roland Myers.

Seniors Chris Smith and Vernon Wilder will help the line out at linebackers; but, if they can't do the job, Lattimore can always go to reserves William Owens and Louis McIver.

McCall, Farmer, Young Big Nominees In Balloting

Ron McCall, the nifty wide-receiver from Arkansas Pine Bluff with a whooping 20-yard-per-catch average; George Farmer, Southern's elusive wide receiver and Roynel Young, a tough defensive back from Alcorn were also big vote getters in balloting dominated by jumbo backs and Goliath linemen.

Ernie "Arrowhead" White, Hampton's huge 6'8", 310 pound, defensive end is one among the group of gigantic linemen nominated for the squad.

Kermit Blount of Winston-Salem and Nate Rivers of South Carolina State locked in the hottest battle of the nominations as they both vie to make the squad as quarterback for the East.

Nominations were made by the coaches and sports information directors of the fifty colleges that will contribute players to the squads. A player received one point for each nomination.

Players from 38 of the 50 colleges were nominated for final voting.

Only the 253 nominees are eligible for final voting. The final ballot will be mailed to the fifty colleges and each franchise of the National Football League and the Canadian Football League.

Nominees will be compiled according to total number of points. A selection committee will be convened in New Orleans on December 11 to select the final squads. Numerical votes will be a major criterion for final selections but not an exclusive determinant.
