Biology Department Receives NALCO Grant For Scholarship

The Department of Biology at A&T State University has received a grant of $5,000 from the NALCO Chemical Company of Oak Brook, Ill. plus a commitment of $2,000 per year for scholarships.

According to Dr. Arthur Hicks, chairman of the department, the $5,000 will be used to support the research program of the department and for enrichment activities, including the enhancement of a reading and enrichment room.

Hicks said NALCO is one of the nation's leading chemical companies and the world leader in treating water for industrial use. It is also the leading supplier of proprietary water treatment chemicals and technical services.

He added that NALCO is particularly interested in persons with a background for technical sales.

"This relationship with such an outstanding firm gives our biology majors another option," said Hicks. "We have not traditionally given much consideration to technical sales, but our graduated and former students have the problem solving abilities so sought by business and industry. They need persons who are broadly trained."

Hicks said the initial winner of the Nalco scholarship is Miss Linda Thompson, a sophomore biology major. Under the agreement between A&T and the company, the scholarship winners will also be offered summer employment with the company.

The grant from the company was announced by John Groch Jr., corporate manager of personnel. Making the award was T.W. Anderson, manager of recruiting and employment.

Interim Chancellor Outlines 'Open Administration'

Priorities which will reflect the actions of an "open administration" were outlined to the A&T faculty Monday in the first faculty forum meeting attended by interim chancellor, Dr. Cleon F. Thompson.

Thompson said his administration will seek to improve communication between administration and the Student Government Association, especially regarding the student activities budget and to improve the aesthetic environment of the campus.

"We want to promote a campus-wide beautification effort, and improved maintenance of our buildings and facilities," said Thompson.

The interim chancellor said efforts will be accelerated to correct university's financial concerns.

"A committee of faculty and staff will be appointed within the next ten days to complete the first phase of the selection process for a new vice chancellor for fiscal affairs," he said. "The second phase of that process will be completed by my office, representatives from the board of trustees and the General Administration, since this will be a senior level appointment."

Thompson also promised additional funds will be sought to continue to enhance the fiscal affairs office.

Thompson, who was given a warm ovation at the conclusion of his address, said meetings will be held with the vice chancellor for academic affairs and the various deans within the next two weeks to address academic priorities.

"The office of the chancellor is open by appointment to the university community," said Thompson.

"We are most interested in the discussion of issues relating to improving our respective tasks and accelerating the growth of this

Thompson To Improve Relations

By Michael Fairley

Students and faculty members alike mourned Chancellor Lewis C. Dowdy's retirement and some view his interim successor as another UNC General Administration threat to A&T's longevity.

But Dr. Cleon F. Thompson, in an impromptu address to student leaders on Nov. 2, expressed a sincere interest and concern about A&T's future. The informal dinner was held to acquaint Thompson with student leaders and discuss methods of bridging communication gaps between students and administrators.

Thompson explained to the attentive crowd that, about three weeks ago, UNC President William Friday instructed him that he would serve as A&T's interim chancellor. Thompson said Friday later told him "It's your decision;" and, after receiving this option, he thought about the psychology behind his appointment.

Though many people might call him an "outsider" to the Aggie Family, Thompson said, "I was part of this community in the early 60s. I've worked close to this campus and have a special interest in the five Black universities."

"Though labeled an outsider I don't feel like an outsider," he said.

Thompson pointed out that he would address a request for a doctoral program here after

A&T's "essential needs" are met, but he did not elaborate on the nature of those needs. According to Thompson a study team is being formed to study what schools should receive doctoral programs and assess the doctoral needs of North Carolina for the next 20 years.

During the past few weeks Thompson said, "I've met with the administration and some students and was concerned about their perception of me; and the only way to contrast that was to come and meet the people."

Thompson stressed an open-door-policy as the focal point of his administration. He also said he is working on a plan to assess student fees and how they are spent, stating that not one dime should be spent unless students know where it is going.

By the end of November, Thompson said he hopes to meet with all media in a 60-mile radius of Greensboro about producing a general A&T program concentrating on where we are and where we are going."

The students listened attentively as Thompson emphasized that a cooperative spirit between students and the administration is vital to A&T's progress.

"If at any point in time, we are not respecting one another we are losing ground," he said.

Thompson pledged his support to the student body and its concerns but said, "I'm not going to promise anything I can't deliver—that's genocide."

Moore Completes Doctoral

Richard E. Moore, director of public information and coordinator of the mass communications program at A&T State University, has completed all requirements for the doctor of education degree in educational administration at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Moore came to A&T in 1967 after serving as assistant director of public relations at Norfolk State University. He served as an officer in the famed 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, and was a reporter for papers in Norfolk, Virginia and Jamaica, New York.

Moore is a 1954 graduate of A&T State University and holds the M.S. degree in journalism from Columbia University.

He is married to the former Annie B. Martin and they are the parents of two daughters and one son.

Library Offers Local, Hometown Publications

By Eric Brown

If you are the type of student who likes to keep abreast of current events or stay in touch with your hometown newspaper, then you should get acquainted with the serials available in F.D. Bluford Library.

A serial is any publication issued in consecutive parts either at regular or irregular intervals. Popular magazines, daily newspapers, and scholarly reports are considered serials, and these items make up a large portion of the serial collection at F.D. Bluford Library.

The Serial Department at F.D. Bluford Library offers popular magazines such as Black Sports, Newsweek, Life, Time, Ebony, Scientific America, Psychology Today, Vogue, and Jet.

The department receives newspapers from most of the major cities in the United States. Major city newspapers such as the New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Washington Post, and the Wall Street Journal are available in the serial department.

The department also offers leading North Carolina newspapers such as the Greensboro Daily News, News and Observer, Fayetteville Observer, Durham Morning Herald, and the Winston-Salem Journal. The department offers leading newspapers from other countries such as the Guardian (London, England), Daily Times (Nigeria), Hindustan Times (India), and the Standard (East Africa).

Connie O. Smith is head of the Serial Department at F.D. Bluford Library. Smith said, "There are 1,148 periodicals or serials available for the students."

Because of the volume and the complexity of the work involved in a serial collection, libraries often employ two or more full-time people to handle these materials. Smith said, "F.D. Bluford Library has hired three full-time employees to work in the Serial Department."

The newspapers are important features in F.D. Bluford Library serial section because many students read newspapers from their hometowns. As stated in the Bluford Library 1979-80 Annual Report, "The library purchases local newspapers and representative newspapers from major centers in the United States."

Smith said, "The serials are provided to aid students in the use of resources." She feels that a sufficient number of students use the serials. Students who use the serials seem to like using them and discover that the serials can help them in their area of study.

Valerie Walker, a 21-year old special education major from New York, said, "A student can always find up-to-date information when he uses the serials."

Ron Eaton, a 22-year old physical education major from Albermarle, said, "The material in the serial collection is good material, and it can be very useful to a student."

Smith said that, in order for F.D. Bluford Library to continue its serial collection, students must help the library keep the serials in good condition and in circulation.

Smith said, "In the past, many periodicals have been mutilated and stolen. Security

Journal Entry

Record companies can be so deceptive.

In an effort to rake in a few extra millions,

Casablanca Records released Walk Away by Donna Summer, what they termed as a "Collector's Edition." By releasing a last Summer album, Casablanca can collect those last sales percentages. Single set albums generally run in the area of $6, $7 and $8; the double sets cost from $10 to $14. Albums cost more than the 45 rpm (revolutions per minute) singles and more than the 12 inch singles.

If a buyer wished to add Walk Away to his collection, he would have to buy the entire album for the one song. The album contains songs found in the Songs You Hear On the Radio Volumes 1 and 2 release.

Casablanca even attempted a compromise with buyers by releasing a condensed version (single record album) of the Radio LP for those who opted to not spend the $10 to $14.

Motown Records has done the same for years. Not only have "Greatest Hits" albums been released but also a number of "Anthologies," which are nothing more than "Greatest Hits" albums with one or two live performances sneaked in or maybe one previously unreleased recording.

Motown released a compilation of songs from motion pictures (recorded by Motown artists) such as Lady Sings the Blues, Mahogany, Ben, Norman is That You?, Bingo Long Traveling All-Stars and Motor Kings, and others. All of the songs had been previously released in other albums.

An album titled It Takes Two, contained successful Motown joint efforts, including selections by Diana Ross and the Supremes and the Temptations, The Supremes and the Four Tops, Marvin Gaye and Tammi Terrell, and others.

Several albums by the original Supremes bearing different titles contain many of the same early

Supreme hits such as "When the Lovelight Starts Shining Through His Eyes," "Where Did Our Love Go?" "Run, Run, Run," "Baby Love," "Come See About Me" and others. The latest examples of this practice is seen in a release whose album cover bears the portrait of every woman who has ever been a Supreme: Diana Ross, Mary Wilson, Florence Ballard, Cindy Birdsong, Jean Terrell, Lynda Lawrence, Sherrie Payne, and Susaye Greene.

To redeem itself, Motown released a collection of previously unreleased recordings titled From the Vaults.

Nevertheless, no matter how often the record companies disguise previous releases, there will still remain that segment of the population (the true, loyal and devoted collector) that will be gullible enough to purchase these ripoffs (like this writer).

Materials Found Mutilated

is our number one problem." Some students who use the serials have found mutilated and torn material.

Ricky Crews, a 19-year old physical education major from Durham, said, "A certain magazine I needed for a class was stolen from the library. I have also used magazines and discovered that certain articles in them were torn out."

Willette Davis, a 19-year old professional English major from Greensboro, said, "An article about A&T was torn out of a particular edition of the Greensboro Daily News, which I needed for a class assignment." Both

Crews and Davis have discovered mutilated material more than once.

Smith wants students to realize that serials represent a large portion of a library's collection, and requires a large part of the operating budget.

The library must pay for mutilated and stolen material. The cost of replacing mutilated and stolen material varies from year to year.

Smith said that she hopes students will use the material in a more responsible manner in the future.

Discover Yourself

When dealing with people on all levels and from all walks of life, it is pertinent to treat them with the respect due them. However, on the road to the achievement of individual goals we seem to lose that special quality of fairplay; the quality of respect. Quoting a popular song, "It's not what you got, but how you use it!" How one uses the gifts of love, respect and friendship separates the wise man from the fool. Don't be misled into false expectations of peers or pressure. Learn from past experiences; what seems to be new and exciting often becomes one's downfall. Respect for another person emphasizes respect of self. Many are hurt when the respect diminishes. Time heals all wounds may be true, but the pain involved mars the soul.

It oftentimes may be best to be like a wise man, to be silent and patient. Life makes no one any promises. Life, the game, is what one makes it.

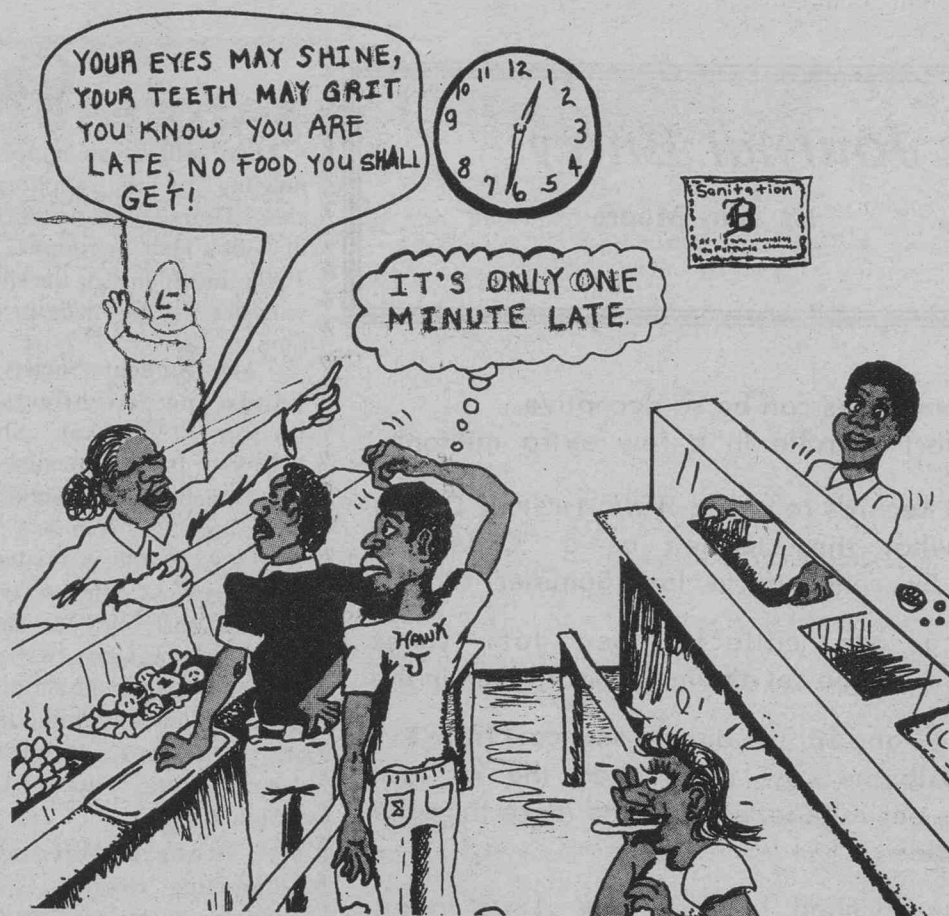

There are two options, a mess or a success. Which is yours? Do not be deceived by foolish pride or uncertainty. Benefit from the knowledge of self-respect. Sound like a personal problem? Possibly, but experience teaches best, and her lessons are often bitter...live and learn, but remember that which has been taught.

If one has someone/something to look up to, value.

Discover respect, or discover yourself, and never have to say "you're sorry."

Give It UP!

By Tony Moore

A&T dining facilities often come under heavy attack by those who use them.

Granted, the food lacks much of that "home-cooked" savor, but realizing that twenty-one meals per week must be prepared for thousands of individuals, it is understandable that little time allows for motherly extras.

Nevertheless, when one's appetite size exceeds his wallet amount, cafeteria food can sometimes appeal keenly to the senses of sight, smell and taste. (If it does, he can go back for seconds; students are entitled to unlimited servings on everything except meat and dessert.)

Besides, those meals are pre-paid. They are his and cannot be denied him -- unless perhaps, for various reasons he could not eat his meal during the specified times. If certain activity interferes with meals, such should (if possible) be altered; if not, "those are the breaks?" Or are they?

Must he be denied that meal because he is one minute late, possibly having just been let out of class or attending to a timely matter?

Is it right to deny him food he sees but cannot have because "the line has been closed for five minutes?"

Cafeteria personnel: how can you in all good (?) conscious deny someone something he has paid for, especially something that is not yours to deny anyone? How would you feel if your child were miles away from home, hungry and denied meals (that you have paid your money for) because of a one to five minute time factor?

Weak In Strength

By Trudy Johnson

Mass communications may be large in number but weak in strength if we do not work together for a bachelor of science in mass communications.

The 250-plus students of the English and Speech departments do not receive deserved recognition, being linked to these two departments.

Recently Dr. Richard Moore, director of public information, commented on all mass communications students being required to write for the school newspaper. He emphasized that other schools require it. But what about us? Mass communications students cannot be forced to exhibit bylines if no such department exists.

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill leads the state with B.A., M.A. and Ph.D programs in journalism. Demanding and receiving a B.S. of Mass Communications at A&T will not cause bankruptcy in the university system.

Winston-Salem State University has a proposed B.S. program for the next school term and it does not yet have the faculty or students.

When other departments receive grants and funds and we are slighted some of our administrators remain idle on the job at students' expense.

SGA President Responds To Letter-To-Editor

Editor-of-the-Register:

As President of the Student Government Association and a concerned student I feel I would be remiss in my duties if I did not respond to the editorials printed in the Friday, October 31, edition of the Register. The article submitted by Mr. J.W. Wright explicitly accused the SGA of committing several harsh acts against Greta Shaw, Miss A&T, and "sabotaging" the entire coronation.

I understand that editorials are opinionated and rightfully so; but, when someone or a group of people are slandered with erroneous information contained in that editorial, such actions cannot be taken lightly. After a meeting was called by the executive members of the SGA with all the people involved with this unfortunate matter, we were able to sit down "together" and try to determine where the untruths originated and who was responsible for circulating such atrocities. I admit such a meeting should have taken place long before "the sore began to fester" but in this case it was better late than never.

The damage done to the integrity of the SGA may be insurmountable resulting in a decrease in the student body's as well as the entire university family's trust in us. We only hope that we will be able to prove these false accusations to be just what they are...FALSE HOODS!! I stand on my beliefs that we must practice what we preach and I wholeheartedly believe the Student Government Association has done everything in its power to comply with these beliefs, refusing to stoop to such low practices of disloyalty to our fellow SGA officials or any other student as far as that's concerned.

I contend that we cannot allow ourselves to fall prey to attempts to cause dissension within the student body of our great university. We must learn to communicate with each other and confront one another with problems we may encounter with the manner in which activities and events are planned and implemented on our campus. The Student Government Association is not beyond making mistakes and will be the first to stand up and admit that fact, but at the same time we will not complacently stand by and watch our reputation be dragged through the mud for things we did not do and had no preconceived notions to do.

I hope this whole situation will become something in the past and will no longer continue to reappear to haunt us throughout this academic year. We have too many things that should take precedence over such trivia. I am convinced we will, as a family, rise above this attempt to divide an ever growing solidified student body. This incident proves that our struggle is hardly over indicating that truly "we have miles to go and promises to keep before we sleep."

Pamela R. McCorkle
President SGA

Apology

Editor-of-the-Register:

A letter-to-the-editor of the Register appeared in the October 28 edition written by one A. C. Robinson; like most of the letters to the editor and most editorials, it was purely opinion. And, an opinion (for those who aren't up on it) is a belief that is not based on what is certain, but on what one thinks to be true or likely.

But after reading this letter, I wrote a letter-to-the-editor that appeared in the October 31st edition of the Register. I wrote this letter in hope of somehow, getting the once called "Coronation Fiasco" out in the open and all clear. I went for facts to put in my letter. After the edition that carried my letter was released on campus and read by persons thought to be involved, the Student Government Association called a meeting. In my letter, "Wright Feels Previous Letter Distasteful," this letter, written in conjunction with my source of fact, went as far to state that the SGA had done everything in their power to "sabotage" the coronation and I went on to list some ways they set out to achieve this goal.

But, after attending meetings with SGA officials and parties believed to be involved, facts were brought out that proved that the SGA did not attempt in any way to sabotage or destroy the success of the coronation. but, in reality, tried to help as much as possible.

After the meeting, that thoroughly convinced me that the SGA was in the clear. I realized that in truth what I got from my source of fact was in reality my source's opinion and that later became opinionated (the act of holding to one's own opinions in a stubborn way).

So, if I may now say without fear, Homecoming and Coronation 1980-81 are in the past. And only pictures, memories and opinionated truth remain. I was part of that coronation and may very well be part of some those pictures. But, I know for sure, that I helped spread opinionated truth about the SGA and for that I apologize to the SGA and our student body. But, let it be known that I don't apologize for the purpose of the letter and that being to bring the parties involved together. So again, SGA and student body, I apologize.

great university." In order to better assess the operations of the university, Thompson said he will convene weekly Monday meetings of the vice chancellors and a monthly meeting of the central administrative council.

"All major decisions regarding this university will be made with one or both of these administrative groups," said Thompson, "and I will take full responsibility for all decisions made."

Thompson said it is his philosophy that the student stands at the top or apex of the educational pyramid; the faculty makes up the body and the administration a makes up the base of the pyramid.

"With this in mind," he concluded, "I stand in support of your efforts and will give my best to provide quality leadership."

SPORTS NOTEBOOK

By Raymond Moody

The Aggies want the Gold! No, not money, the Aggie football team wants the Gold Bowl, a post-season game played between the conference champions of the CIAA and the MEAC.

But the MEAC champion (S.C. State) will probably receive a Division-IAA playoff bid, which means the conference's second place team will be the representative.

And nothing more could make A&T Coach Jim McKinley happier than to have S.C. State accept a playoff bid because McKinley's Aggies have captured second place in the tough Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference. The Aggies won second place honors by whipping Florida A&M 24-22 last Friday night in Tallahassee.

The game wasn't as close as the score indicates. A&T moved the ball at ease for the majority of the night. When the Aggies failed to score, it wasn't because Florida A&M stopped them; it was partly due to penalties or turnovers by A&T.

Coach McKinley was really excited after the game. I've never seen him so emotional. As the Aggies were running off the field after the game, the players were jumping up and touching the cross-bar of the goal post. I guess McKinley didn't want to be left out. He went up there and touched the cross-bar too.

It seems that McKinley feels extra special about this win. There had been much talk about the caliber of teams the Aggies have been beating. No one can talk about that now, not after the Aggies beat a strong FAMU team.

There could be more than a Gold Bowl bid for the Aggies. If A&T plays well and beats Tennessee State in Nashville Saturday, the Aggies could very well end with a Division I-AA bid.

Tennessee State had better not overlook A&T. But then I don't see how a team can underestimate a team that's leading the nation in rushing.

This game is a tough one to predict. Tennessee State has already beaten good teams like Nicholls State and Long Beach State, and it has been defeated by Grambling 52-27. Any team that gives up 52 points has some problems, defensively. I don't care who the team is. The Aggies can move the ball. As far as Tennessee State's passing attack, the Aggie defense must be on its toes all night, especially in the secondary.

A&T must control the ball against the Tigers. This game is a toss up. But I have to go with someone. A&Y by one.

Aggies Drain Rattlers' Venom

By Wade Nash

How many times does a team with a 6-2 record rate as twelve-point underdogs against a 3-4 football team? That was the case when the Aggies and Florida A&M Rattlers met at Florida State's Campbell Stadium.

The Rattlers held a commanding series record of 26-4-3, but the 1980 Aggies weren't intimidated by those statistics and drained the venom from the Rattlers 24-22.

The win shocked Black College football followers and gave Jim McKinley's squad a record of 7-2, while Rudy Hubbard's Rattlers dropped to 3-5.

This game was very important to both teams. S.C. State has already clinched the conference championship and a probable NCAA-IAA playoff berth. The winner of the A&T-FAMU game would claim a respectable second place in the conference standings.

The Aggies won and will probably meet the NCCU Eagles in Gold Bowl IV which means A&T and Central will battle each other twice in a row.

The Aggie offensive line was again the key as they paved the way for 329 yards rushing. Allenton Silcott was outstanding in reserve for the injured Mike West. The other members of "Operation Push," were Maurice Bryant, Corey Junkins, Clifton Britt, Thomas Boone, and Donald Spicely totally dominated the Rattler's defense.

The Aggie defense composed of Gerry Green, Eric Westbrook, Frankie Chesson, Dennis Coit, Mike Joyner, Roy Sheppard, Kevin Robinson and company pursued the Rattlers from the start to finish.

The Rattlers capitalized on an early Aggie mistake to take a 7-0 lead. The Rattlers' Calvin Forte blocked Aggie punter James Jenkins' attempt inside the Aggie one-yard line and Wilfred Ardley recovered it in the Aggie endzone for the six points. Vincent Coleman added the extra point.

The Aggies dominated the first quarter but trailed the Rattlers 7-0. It was obvious that the Aggies came to play after their first possession.

Florida natives Waymon Pitts and Billy Mims were extremely tough on the Rattlers. Pitts rushed for 136 yards in the first half while Mims contributed with a carbon copy of last week's two point conversion against Morgan, but his catch against the Rattlers went for six points.

Quarterback William Watson played his usual outstanding game. The 6-2, 190 senior directed the Aggie offense to perfection utilizing Pitts and Cleotis Johnson to eat up the clock as well as control the ball for scoring drives of 49 and 57 yards. Johnson scored the first Aggie touchdown after Waymon Pitts romped 53 yards. Pitts started inside and faked several would-be Rattler tackles and was goal line bound; only a good angle by a Rattler defender denied him the score.

The Aggie defense worked to perfection while denying the Rattlers the run or the pass. Aggie defenders held the Rattlers to 70 yards on 16 carries, with the bulk of the yardage coming when the Aggies forced A&M quarterbacks Sammy Knight and Nathaniel Koonce to run for their lives. The Aggies held the Rattlers to only six first downs.

The Aggies played with constant determination and their 14-7 halftime lead was a definite reward.

Playing much better, FAMU made a game of it in the third quarter. A 33-yard pass from Nathaniel Koonce to Clarence Chester went for a touchdown and cut the Aggies' lead to 14-13 with 5:38 to play in the third period. Chester then gave the Rattlers the lead. Back to hold for Coleman's point after touchdown attempt, Chester dropped the snap from center and was forced to run. He scrambled left and hurdled into the endzone for a two point conversion, giving FAMU a 15-14 lead.

The Rattler lead did not last long. The Aggies started at their 20, following Chester's score and mounted a deliberate time-consuming drive downfield. The Aggies took the lead 17-15 in 13 plays on a 27-yard field goal by Aaron Herring with 14:20 to play.

The Aggies then increased their lead driving 59 yards in nine running plays. Cleotis Johnson scored on a powerful three-yard run. The Rattlers drove to A&T's 19, where it was fourth and six with 4:32 to play. A field goal would have cut the Aggies' lead to six, but the Rattlers coach, Rudy Hubbard, wanted a touchdown. The Aggie defense had other ideas and forced Billy Koonce to throw inaccurately to stop the Rattler threat.

The Aggies kept the ball for more than three minutes, again demonstrating its ball control offense. The Aggies punted to the Rattlers at the 1:32 mark and Bobby Hawkins returned it for a Rattler touchdown. Vincent Coleman's point after the touchdown cut A&T's margin to 24-22 with 1:16 left. That was as close as the Rattlers could get.

Watson and company finished draining the venom out of the Rattlers and now will move on to Nashville Saturday to pull teeth out of the Tennessee State Tigers.

FAMU Goes 'Big Time' Again On CBS's 60 Minutes

By Wade Nash

Whenever you watch a college band executing intricate formations either in person or on television, or film, much of the developments of those movements and techniques on display can be attributed to Florida A&M's "Marching 100" band.

At last count, the famed FAMU aggregation was responsible for pioneering or refining no less than 29 "innovations or first performances," which are now incorporated into the programs of high school and college marching bands nationwide.

How good is this band? Good enough to be on CBS's 60 minutes. That's right, the "Incomparable Marching 100" has a date with Dan Rather and company sometime in November or early December.

The Rattlers played our Aggies November 7, and the very next day the band was preparing the show for this week's game with Bethune-Cookman. The "100" practice on their own field.

The Rattlers' band is very disciplined and dedicated, and acts more like a fraternity than a band. Their practices are long hard, but fruitful.

Watching them practice Saturday without their uniforms revealed that the band is composed of at least 20 females but they don't get any special breaks. If you're caught moving when the band is at attention, you'll be forced to run laps immediately.

The maestro impresario of this successful music program is Dr. William P. Foster, who has been at Florida A&M since June of 1946.

"My goal then was to build a band of quality, a first class band program. It would be a program," Foster continued, "which would include development of not only an outstanding marching band, but a strong symphonic band as well."

With Foster's vision and determination, the future of the FAMU program was assured from the start. The "100" has been called "The number one marching band in the land" by NBC Television; The Greatest Halftime Show in America, by Life Magazine, "The Lena Horne of Bands," by the Wall Street Journal, "The Most Imitated Band in America," by the Miami Herald; "The Most Televised Band in America," by the Florida Times Union (Jacksonville). In all, the band has been televised by all the country's major networks a total of 32 times. They've appeared at three Super Bowls, The American Football, conference game, and The Black College All Star game in New Orleans. Yet, the acclaim doesn't stop there.

The "100" has rendered command performances in Nassau, Bahamas (1963) and has received countless hundreds of invitations to appear throughout the country, South Africa, Europe and metropolitan cities all over the south.

Featured in two major commercials in recent years (for Coca-Cola in 1975 and for Welch's Grape Drink in 1979) and in a paramount News Film "Halftime U.S.A." their performance at Friday's November 7 contest with NC A&T was filmed for prime time tv. The FAMU marching band has indeed become the country's most revered band.

Band announcer Joe

Bullards sums up the band's immense success this way: "In football it's the man that can outrun the legendary Orenthal James (O.J.) Simpson. In marching bands, it's the band that can out march the "Marching 100" of FAMU... And in Tallahassee, Florida, no band has done it yet."
