DeLauder Named School Dean

Dr. William B. DeLauder, who has served as chairman of the A&T Chemistry Department since 1976, will become the new dean of the School of Arts and Sciences beginning Oct. 1. DeLauder’s appointment was announced Thursday by A&T Chancellor Dr. Edward B. Fort. He will succeed Dr. Frank White who retired in June.

“Dr. DeLauder’s appointment will enable us to continue our forward moving thrust as associated with the academic quality of this very important school within the university structure,” said Fort. “I am confident that he will provide the positive leadership and work in concert with the administration and faculty, as we work together for the benefit of the students.”

McNair Seriously Injured In Car Accident in Texas

CLEAR LAKE, TEX.- Dr. Ronald McNair, a graduate of A&T State University and one of the first three Blacks to be selected as astronauts in the U.S. Space program, was seriously injured here in an automobile accident last Sunday.

Officials at Clear Lake Hospital said Thursday that McNair received a rib fracture and other injuries, but his condition is being listed as stable.

A physics major while at A&T, McNair received a Ph. D. in laser physics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

In a telephone conversation Thursday afternoon, McNair said: “Tell the A&T students and faculty that I am deeply appreciative of their concern for me. I hope to leave the hospital in a couple of days.”

A&T Physics Society Wins Award In National Contest

By Thomas E. Harris and Mary Moore

A&T’s chapter of Sigma Pi Sigma (Society of Physics Students) is one of seven institutions to receive a cash award in national competition among 494 colleges.

A&T received the Marsh W. White Award of $150 to display a lunar sample exhibit distributed through and by NASA. The project was conceived, written and submitted by A&T students.

Montaut Mabry, president of the society, explained that the White Awards are presented by the American Institute of Physics. Its purpose is to provide financial aid in support of original student projects. The proposals for projects must be written and designed to promote interest in physics among students and the general public.

The awards are named in honor of Marsh W. White for his more than 40 years of service to Sigma Pi Sigma. He served as executive secretary of the society from 1930-67 and as president from 1967-70. White is professor emeritus of physics at Pennsylvania State University. He is also past president of the American Association of Physics Teachers.

Members of Sigma Pi Sigma chapter at A&T, and its advisor, Dr. Maria Diaz, submitted the proposal in April and received notification of the award earlier this month.

The Lunar Sample Exhibit consists of rock samples from the moon and will be on display at Maritime Hall.

Gallery Needs Curator, Lyceum Funding In Doubt

By John Michael

The 1981-82 school year is well underway academically, athletically and socially, but one essential part of the university’s cultural development, the arts, may be completely neglected.

The integral areas in question are music, drama, dance, and the visual arts. Two areas of most immediate concern are the H.C. Taylor Art Gallery and the Lyceum Series. These culturally rich parts of A&T’s student, faculty, and community growth are so beset with financial difficulties that they may not get off the ground during the first semester, and they it will be fortunate to rebound after Christmas.

Leroy Holmes, art department chairman and acting curator of the Taylor Art Gallery, is severely limited in time and personnel because of his full-time obligations in the art department. He said, “A&T has never had a full-time curator and presently does not have the budget for even a part-time curator, or an (See Lyceum Page 3)
David Miller Elected UNC-G SGA President

David Miller, a senior social work major from Reidsville, was elected Student Government Association President at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro in elections Wednesday and Thursday. Miller won by a 55-vote margin over Brian R. Berkley of Raleigh.

Miller received 593 off the 1,131 votes cast in the election; Barry 538.

Miller has served on the SGA senate appropriations committee, as president of the Black Society community liaison committee chairman and on the Chancellor's Planning Council, and was an intern with the probation and parole division of the North Carolina Department of Corrections.

Chancellor Lewis Dowdy, 37 Faculty, Staff Retire

Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, former A&T Chancellor, and 37 faculty and staff members with a combined total of 855 years' service, retired from the university.

Dowdy returned to A&T this spring for capacity. Heading the list of longtime employees who retired are William H. Gamble, who worked with the school 43 years, most recently as admissions director.

Veda Stroud, associate business professor, was with the university 42 years.

Dowdy was honored by the Aggie family at a tribute in Corbett Sports Center May 1. Several thousand persons turned out for tributes by University of North Carolina officials, city and state leaders, alumni representatives, student body, faculty and staff.

Dr. Velma Speight, National A&T Alumni Association president, presented Dowdy with a $500 check and a plaque. Seven of the retirees left with 30 or more years' service. They were the following: Carrie Harper, assistant student financial aid director, 34 years; Herbert Heughan, associate math professor, 33 years; Talmage Brown, associate animal science professor, 33 years; Wilson E. Freeman, housekeeping supervisor, 32 years; Dr. Glenn F. Rankin, vice chancellor for academic affairs, 31 years; Milton Hall, physical plant employee, 30 years; Melvin Alexander, associate industrial technology professor, 30 years, and Dr. Howard Pearrell, music professor, 30 years.

Other retirees include the following: Anne Graves-Korengay, international student affairs director, 28 years; Forrin Willis, assistant health education and recreation professor, 27 years; Lillie B. McLendon, housekeeping assistant, 27 years; Naomi Wynn, Nursing School dean, 26 years; and Eddie Hargrove, veteran affairs director, 26 years.

7 Cadets Win Scholarships

By THOMAS E. HARRIS

Seven A&T freshmen have won four-year scholarships from the United States Army valued between $10,000 and $14,000 each. The scholarships were made available through the Quality Enrichment Program. The QEP is a financial aid program that was begun for the 1981-82 year. The purpose of the program is to attract quality students to the nation's 21 historically Black institutions that host Army ROTC.

A total of 91 scholarships were awarded nationally. In order to qualify, potential applicants must score a minimum of 850 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test, remain at the institution in good standing, enrolled and actively participate in ROTC for the full four years.

The scholarship pays for full tuition, all books, lab fees and academic supplies - to include material such as calculators and drafting materials. Recipients also receive subsistence allowance of $100 per month up to 10 months for every year the scholarship is in effect.

All scholarship recipients except two are from the Fayetteville area. These five students are: William Powell, Terrence Brown, Charles Brown, all engineering majors; Martin Torrence, a sociology major; and Tracy McKenzie, a mass media major.

The Board of Trustees of the library requires two items of identification from each person obtaining a library card. The person's current local address must be on each item. This means that the identification must have the address here in Greensboro, not the address in some other city or state. Most students use the forms given by the university when fees are paid (these may not have the local address and should be checked before being brought to the library) and letters or magazines which have been postmarked and sent to the local address. A student bringing one identification can have the address verified by a call to his dormitory, to the rental agent for his apartment, or to someone living at his home address. This call would count as the second identification. For further information call: Lois Williams 373-2159 from 9-6 p.m.

acting secretary." He also added that Eva Miller retained the title of full-time curator, even though she taught two classes and was an associate professor. He said "Miller unfailingly gave her time and dedication to the Taylor Gallery during the 14 years she served at A&T."

Miller was replaced by Sandra Rigs and Janice Davis, an artist from Virginia, for the 78-79 school year, but in the summer of 1979, Holmes was given the duties of acting curator and has assumed those responsibilities until the present.

Holmes said, "We have been fairly successful the past two years, despite the lack of a staff and an adequate budget."

According to Williams, "The money for our student government association entertainment is being held up by the same fiscal problems that are tying up the Lyceum Series."

Last spring Williams said he submitted a tentative budget request for the 1980-81 school year to Dr. Jesse Marshall, vice chancellor for student affairs, hoping the money would be appropriated in May 1981 for use this fall. But Williams said he didn't receive any money for the 80-81 events until Dec. 1980, which made booking for the Lyceum Series almost impossible.

"You must book all the events in advance because most of the class acts are scheduled by May or June of the preceding school term," Williams explained.

"In our case, I prevented from doing this because I don't know what my spending parameters are going to be," Williams added that during summer and early fall, "most artistic performances have their tour directions set, dates are difficult to get and discounts are simply not available."

He said "This makes every act we can sign to a contract available only at the maximum cost." Williams also pointed out that to prevent problems of this nature, "the budget must be set and the acts signed, or the booking agencies will cancel your date. He said schools are then left to negotiate an agreement because all dates are tentative until a contract is signed.

As far as this year's Lyceum Series or any other special booking is concerned, Williams concluded that he doesn't know what is going to happen and "we will just have to wait and see."
The world of academia can get one down, and the mind often craves the pleasant distractions of the lively arts–music, art and drama.

During the 79–80 school year, students were blessed with the diversions provided by Mercer Ellington and the Duke Ellington Orchestra, Jimmy Owens’ Jazz Plus and the Negro Ensemble Company, just to name a few. But this year, students may have to create their own escape from academic depression.

Last year’s Lyceum Series never came to pass because the budget was receiveda–too late to schedule any name acts. It appears the same thing will happen this year and this will deprive the students of an important part of their education, a part they cannot get from books or the classroom.

Since the money won’t be used for its original intent, what will happen to it? If this year’s budget is not approved in time, what will happen to student activity fees earmarked for the Lyceum Series? Will it be used to pay past university debts, or will it fall into some nebulous area, never to be seen again?

If students want to see a rebirth of the Lyceum Series, they should pose these and other questions to the administration. It’s your money. Don’t you want to know what will happen to it?

Career Day Bust

By Tony Moore

What I Got Out Of Career Day—by Liberal A. Student.

This was my third career program. Each year I’ve gone into Corbett Sports Center hoping to discuss career opportunities with representatives that were interested in a person with my training. Unfortunately, there were never any (many) reps who were interested.

I wasn’t as fortunate this year. In the past, by way of compensation, I was able to come away with free toiletry samples, posters, sausage biscuits, coke and a free Polaroid snapshot.

Unfortunately, when I arrived, all the goodies were gone and the long Polaroid line made me lose all interest in wanting a self-portrait.

Mr. (Leon) Warren, career planning and placement director, promised faithfully that “this year, there will be more firms for liberal arts majors.” The number of representatives this year that could talk to non-technical people was more than last year. Last year there were three. These included some book publishing company and good ol’ Black Collegian Magazine, who uses this day primarily as a new subscriber campaign.

This year the number was larger than last year’s. This year there were four. These included a hotel, a bank and a supermarket company.

As I’ve done for the past two years, I’ll be forced to wait until March for representatives interested in students like me to visit the campus.

You know, until I came to college, I attended integrated schools all my life. But once a collegian, I found myself segregated variously. And, with respect to this career day that alleges it’s designed for all disciplines, I’m thoroughly confused.

Then again, one should attempt to understand the position of those in charge (whatever it is). And it also must be conceded that a “good faith effort” was made to appease those folks in...what’s the name that school?

Prepare...

By Audrey L. Williams

Summer’s almost gone and crisp autumn days rapidly approach.

It’s once again time for sweaters, colds, no heat and chicken noodle soup.

Autumn is one of the most beautiful seasons of the year. The Virgo’s moon is almost up and the Libra is about to have his day.

This is also the time of year when a warm bed takes preference over an 8 a.m. class.

The ground hog sleeps when the weather chills, but this is no reason to slow down your activities. Inactivity can increase one’s weight by at least 10 pounds.

Autumn is Aggie football games, world series, movie opening and fall break.

So, if you feel this is all too much for you, take a vacation come fall break and go to the Bahamas and let nature lovers enjoy changing seasons.

If you decide to stick around, you might as well get used to the weather because the best is yet to come.

In Aggieland, cooler weather is not just one of those things. It’s jumping out of that warm bed, and stepping into a nice icy cold shower. This only happens to late risers. You’ve got to be an early bird. Cooler weather means walking by the steam and watching your natural wave go “flop”!

Last, but not least, cooler weather means more clothes and less eye activity (sorry fellas that’s nature).

So, Aggies, make the best of the autumn weather. Stay active, be happy and stay warm!
Student Says ‘Minorities’ Article Not ‘OK’

Editor of the Register:
I am writing in response to the article that appeared on the front page of September 6th edition of the Greensboro Daily News entitled “Minorities Say Campus Life is OK.”
I am a sophomore at A&T with a cumulative GPA of 3.8, who was accepted at Carolina, North Carolina State and Northwestern University in Illinois. Moreover, I attended a predominately white junior high school in Montgomery County, Maryland, for three years. There were 20 Black students among 1500 white students. I know what it is like to attend an almost all white school.
My experiences in both academic environments have taught me to respect and appreciate those institutions which are historically Black.
I am disappointed, frustrated, surprised and disgusted with the blasphemous comments made by Black students who are supposedly attending UNC-G. I am particularly angered by the comments made about A&T.
In my opinion, these students have a misguided perspective as far as Black institutions are concerned. I am appalled that they would not recommend attending an all Black university.
Evidently, these students are not aware of the fact that the main reason that the white institutions accept them is by force. Most white institutions have been threatened with the loss of financial aid unless they adhere to the guidelines set forth by HEW. This constitutes the main reason most Blacks are not accepted at Southern white universities.
As far as those Blacks at UNC-G are concerned, I feel that these students have forgotten from whence we have come. Evidently, they do not realize the advantages of attending a Black institution.
By attending A&T, we have I prospered academically, but I have also grown socially and emotionally.
Black institutions aid Black students in developing the self-confidence they need to endure the prejudices of the world. Black institutions provide Blacks with a feeling of belonging.
We who attend Black colleges and universities are better informed about local, state and national issues that apply to us. Black institutions have programs and activities that foster growth and development in leadership roles. Black institutions provide Blacks with many opportunities to meet infamous Black leaders. We are in close contact with Blacks who have received international recognition. These experiences provide students with role models who give us incentives to better ourselves. Blacks emphasize Black culture. We learn to appreciate our heritage.
In addition, Black institutions provide white students, who are also culturally deprived, a deeper respect for all minorities.
I am proud that I attend A&T. However, I am saddened whenever I see Blacks at white institutions belittle Black institutions.
In conclusion, many Blacks are given access to higher education. There was a time when a Black person could not attend a white institution. I wonder what those students interviewed would have done had they been college bound in the 1950’s. I assume that they would not have attended college.
Black students must realize that, when they denounce and do not accept Black institutions, they are denouncing themselves. We desperately need to regain the unity and pride that seems to be fading. Let us unite and ask, “What is a partying school?” I feel that any university or college that is not a partying school. What one gains from an institution strongly depends on the individual. We need to reevaluate ourselves as well as Black institutions.
Sincerely,
Tia Terry Hodge

Communications Students In Demand?

By TRUDY A. JOHNSON
Engineering may be one of the major fields Blacks enter, but Black Collegian Magazine attracted many mass communication students to the annual Career Awareness Program Wednesday in Corbett Sports Center. Reginald Smith, an account executive for the magazine who represented the firm, says many students wanted to know why the magazine has so many advertisements for engineering students. Lewis emphasized that the magazine has entry-level and advanced openings in sales, marketing and public relations for mass communication students.
"Currently, we have five job openings in the listed areas," he said.
He added that "engineering, especially Blacks in engineering, is in great demand in technical businesses and this area has a scarcity of Blacks. It is not that we cater our recruitment to Black majors, but it is really a matter of the types of advertisements sent to our publication."
Lewis, who has been with the company four years, said, "My experience here last year was quite memorable. As I was leaving Greensboro, a student stopped to interview me. It was amazing because I was in my car leaving the city."
Other companies interested in mass communications students were Holiday Inn, Grand Union Company and First National Bank.
Holiday Inn's director of Equal Opportunity Employment, Ron Lee, said, "We're the largest hotel complex in America and are interested in most majors. "For our communications students, they are in demand. We most definitely need people with good writing skills--especially for our speech writing, public relations, sales and marketing areas," Lee said.
Other areas of employment are human resources, steamboat, hotel and restaurant management, business development, data processing, financing and planning and game room management.
Holiday Inn's executive headquarters are in Memphis, Tennessee.
Grand Union Supermarket Company owns national chains under the name Big Star Supermarkets. Its executive headquarters are in Elwood Park, New Jersey.
Edwin Chavis, training manager for suburban New Jersey and New York, said, "Entry-level employment begins with our six-month training program and you are given a knowledge of all supermarket departments."
For communications students, the public relations department should attract you. Yet, I note every trainee goes through the six-month training because it takes time to learn our company. You just don't walk into public relations without thorough qualifications," Chavis said.
First Union National Bank of Charlotte was another company interested in public relations and broadcast personnel.
"FUNB is interested in communications majors for its corporate communications department and its internal television network," one of the firm's representatives said.

Career Day '81 Largest Ever

By ALICE HESTER
One hundred and forty-one firms were represented in Corbett Sports Center Wednesday during Career Day, the largest ever.
"The year has been the best that A&T has had in the history of the school," said Leon Warren, Career Planning and Placement director. Warren also said that he was pleased with the student turnout.
On Tuesday, the seminar held in Barnes Hall was highlighted by Chancellor Elwood Fort. In his speech, he mentioned all areas of study at the university and the growth that is expected of the university.
During the social hour and banquet Tuesday night, Cyrus Johnson, vice president of General Mills, spoke on "How To Build A Better Future."
He depicted what the future would be like for young graduates in the job market. After speaking to the group, Johnson left for Hong Kong, Japan, to represent his company in a new business venture.
Career Day also brought about mixed emotions in students as they visited their respective career booths.
The majority of students interviewed Wednesday said they were at the way the day turned out.
Stanley Smith, a senior marketing major, remarked, "It's one of the best days at A&T."
Leo Lynch, a junior business administration major, said, "I found everyone eager to help students. The people were very friendly."
Felix Forbes, a junior industrial technology major, remarked, "As an industrial technology major, I found the field to be wide open."
Deborah Rodgers, a sophomore clothing and textiles major, said, "It was really nice; I got a lot of useful information."
James McComb, a freshman computer science major, said, "I felt the program was very rewarding and the information I received was most interesting."
Many students were not as successful in their career prospects. Chester Neal, a senior agricultural education major, remarked, "Overall it seemed to be fine; I would like to see more ag-related industries."
Wanda Williams, a junior nursing major, said, "I couldn't find much in my major that I was interested in."

HEALTH NEWS

The World Health Organiz- tion estimates that 20 per cent of the world's middle-aged population suffers from high blood pressure. For black adults in America, the proportion is much higher—almost as many as one in three according to some studies.
"High blood pressure is aptly known as the "silent killer," because symptoms are often not obvious to the individual. Nonetheless, high blood pressure is the most common of the chronic diseases treated by physicians in the black community. There are 13 million more times likely to cause fatal strokes, heart disease or kidney damage than it is among middle-aged whites.

The A&T Register is not the Public Relations Office of the Athletic Department. We will call the shots as we see them and the teams past performance against S.C. State speaks for itself. I realize that this is a new year and I believe Raymond Moody was trying to emphasize the fact that we owe them a lot.

I hope in the future that coaches, players and students can accept the good with the bad and don’t cut off your nose just to spite your face.

Moody’s comments were nothing compared to what was being said in the $500 section. We don’t make the news–the team and coaches do. We will always call them like we see them.

Tension is extremely high on the practice field as the team prepares for this week’s dog fight. The football team’s intensity was further heightened after Raymond Moody’s commentary in the Sept. 15 issue of The Register.

I do believe A&T’s chances of beating S.C. State hasn’t looked this good in years, but that’s on paper. Our players will have to produce on the field.

Jim McKinley’s team will have to play a very physical ball game, limit its mental mistakes, and protect freshman quarterback Steve Lynn. The Aggie offensive line, better known as “Operation Push”, has a score to settle with the Bulldogs. They were the only team to hold them under 100 yards rushing last year and the Aggies don’t intend for that to happen this year. All-American Mike West said, “You don’t know how bad I want this game, and I pray for a victory every day and night. In the past, I faced Bulldog Philip Murphy, a third-round draft choice of the Rams, Ervin Parker, of the Buffalo Bills, and John Altford, who now play for the Miami Dolphins. They have all moved on, and now I’ve got a score to settle. You can bet that I intend to walk out of Bulldog Stadium a winner.”

Senior center and tri-captain Donald Spicely added, “We’re definitely going to Orangeburg to win, and I know it’s going to be one of our toughest games of the year, but we’re ready to play and to win.”

Bulldog Stadium will showcase the conference’s premiere running backs in A&T’s Waymon Pitts and the Bulldogs’ Henry Odom.

Pitts has 4.3 speed in the forty-yard dash and hits the offensive line extremely quickly. It’s not uncommon to see Pitts fake would-be tacklers for big gains. Pitts is a sure bet to be the Aggies’ career leading ground gainer before the season is out.

Odom led the MEAC in rushing and set an NCAA-IAA single game scoring record with six touchdowns.

Both teams will start quarterbacks that are new to the opposing team. Steve Lynn is 1-0 for his college career, but Saturday’s game will be entirely different from any other game he will play this season. Lynn will face a Bulldog team that’s always tough against the run, and S.C. State secondary is very physical.

The determining factors could be conditioning and depth. The temperature is expected to be in the 80’s and you can bet the humidity will add to the heat.
