Annual housing shortage appears to be clearing up

By GAIL HAIRSTON
and
DONALD B. SELLERS
Staff Writers

An annual housing shortage seems to befall A&T; especially for male students.

This year was no different.

But, the situation appeared on its way to clearing up recently with 16 rooms each becoming available in Scott Hall and Kent Court.

The nonresidential section of Kent Court was converted from adult education classrooms to dormitory rooms.

"The attrition of students leaving in a semester is how we acquired the extra space," said Dr. Judge Kornegay, director of housing operations.

And, since the semester began, the housing office was able to find on-campus housing for at least one student per day, Kornegay added.

The shortage was created when the number of returning male students exceeded the number of available rooms.

Kornegay arranged for some students to be housed in the Downtowner Motor Inn until rooms became available on campus.

They were charged $3.15 per day (the same amount to live in a dormitory) or $6.30 for a private room.

"The university is paying for four people in a room with two beds," said Bharat Patel, Downtowner manager. "And, if two students want to stay in a room, the students pay half and the university (pays) the other half."

Housing is limited because the university has only enough rooms to accommodate 55 percent of the student body.

—Kornegay

The students had access to color television, a telephone, morning wake-up calls, free local calls and chairs.

However, the motel did not provide food service Patel said.

Charles Crisp, a freshman who lived at the Downtowner during the fall semester, cited privacy and quiet, the television and the air conditioner as advantages of living at the motel. He lives in Scott Hall this semester.

"I was disappointed at not living on campus at first," said freshman Maurice Mayo. "But, I like living at the Downtowner."

However, he said, he did not like having to walk the distances to and from campus, and, sometimes, in inclement weather.

Housing officials had considered putting students in the lobby of Scott Hall-A before the additional space in Scott and Kent opened up.

"We just did not have enough available housing space for all the students at that time," Kornegay said.

Housing is limited, he continued, because the university has only enough rooms to accommodate 55 percent of the student body, which has ranged from 4,800-5,000 students in the last few years.

A special committee was formed to look into the housing problem and to try to prevent it from recurring.

Father Frank McGuire

Campus Ministry in the works

By TERRA SINGLETON
Staff Writer

Eleven years ago when the Rev. Gene Sheraton was at A&T, he tried to establish a catholic campus ministry.

Sheraton left before that ever happened to accept a position at Alabama University. And not much has been thought about a campus ministry since — at least not until Father Frank McGuire decided to do something about it.

McGuire, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., and a member of St. Mary's parish on Gorrell Street, is in charge of that program beginning here at A&T.

Although McGuire is in the process of starting a campus ministry here, he also holds gatherings at Bennett College.

McGuire said that there is a need for a campus ministry at A&T.

"The Catholic Church feels responsible to those that are Catholics," he said. "There aren't many colleges or universities, without a Catholic ministry.

"The Catholic Church is well received in the South but not in a Black community. Many people feel or think it's a white religion and it's not; it's to preach the Gospel to everyone," he said.

According to the ordained priest, many college students lose contact with religion. "And we want them to know we are interested," he said.

"Our campus ministry program is in its infancy stages right now," McGuire said.

"A full-fledge program began during the 82-83 academic year. Responding to the call to preach the good news to all, the Catholic ministry hopes to bring a special message of God's love to the students, faculty and administration," he added.

In addition to McGuire, there are a number of other parishioners from St. Mary's Church. Many work at other colleges.

"The c.c.m. is (designed) to serve those who are Catholic.

Our concern in faith is for the entire campus community at both A&T and Bennett. We do not wish to discriminate along any boundaries at all," McGuire said.

One of the services offered by the campus ministry is an on-campus Mass held each Sunday at 4 p.m.

At 8 p.m. on Thursdays in the Lutheran Student Center, there are "rap sessions" held on the Catholic faith and life.

McGuire said, "Twice a year, we participate in diocesan retreat programs for all college students in the western half of North Carolina.

"These encounter weekends are extremely beneficial to the students who participate and to the campuses from which they come," he said.

Socials, will be planned for the beginning and end of each semester, McGuire said. These socials will be planned by parishioners and students.

As an ordained priest, the newcomer to A&T is a seasoned counselor.

While attending a seminary in Allentown, Pa., for his masters, McGuire worked with that city's hotline counselling people contemplating suicide.

During the summer, he attended a seminary in the Panama Canal Zone.

Although there is just about a handful of Catholics residing on campus, McGuire said total availability to the students, staff and administration is a goal of the Catholic ministry.

All About Success For The Black Woman

My overwhelming reason for writing this book is that in the last 10 years, as I traveled across the country speaking and making personal appearances, I met hundreds of Black women in a very great variety of jobs, from unskilled labor to the major professions of medicine and law. The majority of them were intelligent and hardworking, yet in one way or another, they all told me that they were being exploited — overworked, underpaid and not appreciated...

I do not care if you are in college, have a job, are out of a job or simply not rising fast enough — I know that you agree with me about one thing at least: you want more! Not just a better salary but more respect from your colleagues, more chance for promotion, more opportunities to prove what you can accomplish. I say that you deserve more. Follow the principles in this book and you will get more.

From the Introduction

Black women, now pursuing professional careers, are seeking advice on how to make it to the top. Confronted by many obstacles, how can Black women best prepare themselves for what lies ahead in today's competitive job market?

All About Success For The Black Woman, written by Black-woman entrepreneur and former top fashion model Naomi Sims, provides the first complete and definitive portrait of the opportunities available to Black women and reveals essential facts about what it takes to be successful.

Starting with her own unique techniques for assessing goals and measuring motivation, Sims analyzes job-related issues and occupational opportunities specifically with regard to today's Black career woman.

Drawing on her own experience — plus the viewpoints of hundreds of successful Black women — Sims offers all sorts of career advice: everything from tips on preparing the perfect resume and guaranteed-to-get-the-job interview tactics to all about negotiating raises and promotions.

She tells about minority funding programs you can qualify for that will pay for job training. She shares her strategies for identifying sources of power within the business world and manipulating your way through the corporate jungle.

Most important of all are her tips on how to juggle a career with marriage and motherhood — the double lives that Black women in particular must often learn to cope with alone.

Naturally, as a health and beauty expert, Sims has plenty of advice on how to keep your vitality, personality and looks at peak performance on the job every day, plus special pointers about dressing the part — how to look like a senior executive on a secretary's salary.

The book also comes complete with a special appendix that evaluates job opportunities in every career field from aerospace to zoology: where the jobs are, how to apply, what salary to expect and what the chances in each are for you, today's bright, beautiful Black career woman.

A comprehensive and unique guide, All About Success For The Black Woman breaks through the myths and misconceptions about today's Black career woman to deliver an account that is candid and extremely informative.

DUPIE

College life stripped

Who says college life in the '80s is all work and no play? Not Dupie.

He attends a large university where beer, sex and food are still taken more seriously than Philosophy 101.

Typical, but hardly average, Dupie worries more about his macho image than making the dean's list.

He copes with calculators who have identity crises, suspects the bold, little birdies who fly around the campus are really CIA agents, and sends his parents smelling salts with his tuition bills.

To help him navigate the halls of academe, he has a roommate named Madigan (whose chief study aid is cocaine), and dates Melanie — devoted to her "physics of sex" project, and other interesting experiments.

Dupie and company didn't wander off the set of Saturday Night Live. They star in a wonderfully offbeat comic strip called Dupie, created by Stanford University graduate Gil Morales.

Now collected in Wake Me When The Semester's Over, the Dupie strips are being touted as the freshest addition to college humor since Garry Trudeau's Doonosbury hit the scene a decade ago.

Morales

Dupie originally appeared in The Stanford Daily.

Morales, born in 1959, in the smoggy suburbs of Los Angeles, stumbled into cartooning at the age of 15, while working on his high school newspaper.

The only person left in the newsroom one deadline day, he was promoted to cartoonist on the spot, so that he could fill a large, empty space on the editorial page.

At first, he couldn't draw human beings (a defect he hid by having the people in his drawings speak from behind doors, desks, trees, automobiles.) But, by the time he entered Stanford as a freshman, his cartooning had greatly improved.

In September 1978, the first Dupie strip ran in the campus newspaper.

Not surprisingly, Dupie is an extension of Morales as he progressed through four years of college, graduating from Stanford with a bachelor's degree in economics in 1981. He is now working on the development of a syndicated feature, and lives in Palo Alto, Calif.

Dupie, who has also graduated, will undoubtedly find his way into more of Morales' work — if not in body, certainly in spirit!

THE ENTITY

A Movie Review

By JODY R. MARTIN
Special to the Register

If you want to see what a close encounter of the weird kind looks like, it's in a new movie called The Entity.

Barbara Hershey stars as a woman whose life suddenly becomes terrifying as she suffers repeated sexual assaults by an invisible creature from another dimension.

To make matters worse, when she tries to get help, no one will believe her.

Her psychiatrist thinks she is having "mental fixations," and a group of parapsychologists from a local college thinks she's just crazy.

They finally believe her and begin to help her, after they see the creature's power firsthand.

Supposedly based on an actual case, Entity is basically a one-dimensional monotonous movie that, except for the assault scenes and the special effects used to show the creature's power, is really very boring.

The plot basically consists of Hershey's character being raped and assaulted, trying to find someone to help her but not being believed.

There's a lot of screaming and hysterics thrown in for good measure.

Although a little more tastefully done, Entity is only one step above those anti-female, exploitative films of late.

The repeated-assault scenes, although effective in pushing the movie's point across, are just a little bit too much. All this movie really shows is that a working woman who is trying to improve her and her life and that of her family's is a target for the strong, masculine forces of the world (the creature is constantly referred to as "him" and "he," never "it").

Personally, I went expecting a good horror-thriller movie but was disappointed by what was shown.

Billy Taylor to appear at A&T

One of jazz's truly great artists, Billy Taylor and his critically acclaimed Billy Taylor Trio will appear in Harrison Auditorium March 2.

Taylor, who is often referred to as the elder statesman of jazz, is many things: pianist, composer, recording artist, arranger and conductor, actor, author and more.

"I was the first to make the statement that jazz is classical music," he has said. "I don't consider it Black classical music but American classical music...Black music has contributed much more to the culture of this country than any of us realize."

A gifted lecturer, Taylor has brought jazz into the classrooms in high schools and colleges all over America, and he has taught and lectured at schools such as Manhattan School of Music, C.W. Post College and Columbia and Yale Universities.

Taylor has consistently selected artists of exceptional stature to accompany him; the combination of piano, bass and drums is one which pleases even the most uninitiated ear. The Trio's comfortable blend of musicianship creates a rapport between its members nearly as infectious as the music itself.

Joining Taylor are Keith Copeland on drums; and Victor Gaskin, one of the most successful jazz bass players in the country.

In jazz parlance, the Billy Taylor Trio "cooks"; its compelling rhythms move even the impassive.

This cohesive and dynamic unit has been entertaining at home and abroad, while serving as a super sales instrument for jazz by providing a better understanding of American music.

Bleak at best

Experts and specialists and their surveys have decided that the job market for 1983 facing graduates has the most depressed opportunities in years; especially minorities. Depending on which survey you consult, job openings for minority graduates are expected to decline by 6.2 percent.

Overall, salaries are expected to increase by only about 2 percent over last year.

In the different areas, engineering will continue to offer the highest starting salaries for undergrad candidates. A ray of hope remains likewise, in descending order, for computer science, physics, accounting, agriculture, math, marketing/sales and business.

The salaries in education, the social sciences, liberal arts and communications will be the lowest.

Other expert surveys inform that this year will, however, experience a decrease in the demand for engineering graduates, a minuscule increase in the hiring of entry-level people in math and science and other technical areas, and a slight but painful decrease in the hiring of nontechnical people.

Some areas of the country may have more job opportunities than others this year, says another specialist. So, a willingness to relocate could be the difference in getting a job.

The expert info cites the Southcentral, Southwestern and Southeastern states as offering the best opportunities, and the Northwest, Midwest and Northeast as the worst areas for job prospects.

The job outlook for '83 grads is bleak to say the least.

And, to think that Parade Magazine touted the Class of '83 as the smartest in quite some time.

Get off Candid Camera

By Audrey L. Williams

Last week, a phenomenal event took place at Howard University's annual communications conference.

More than 1,200 prospective Black journalists in both print and broadcasting herded themselves into screening and interview sessions in hopes of becoming employed journalists.

But arrogance and disrespect seemed to overshadow the interview sessions like a dark cloud.

As she shoved her way through the anxious interviewees, an attractive young Black student from Northwestern University seemed to forget mama's teaching in all but a moment.

The young woman then proceeded to an interview booth of an NBC recruiter as he interviewed another aspiring journalist.

"Sir, could you please look at my resume?"

Immediately she was whisked away and scolded by a perturbed Howard U. instructor.

It seems that the hard, cold facts of this business are that many young Blacks adhere to the aggression syndrome, without regard for his brother or sister.

And it also seems, after listening to many of the young Black aspiring journalists, that everyone wants to sit in front of a camera or be heard over the air waves.

There's nothing wrong with anchoring news, especially if you're good, but it appears that many young Blacks are falling to the feet of vanity and unrealistic goals.

Not every Black that walks into the doors of a CBS or an NBC can be an anchor and that's a fact!

Black journalists are needed in management positions. In these positions, Blacks can make decisions that can change the world and help filter out some of the indignities of the world.

Because the media have fooled us into believing that, in front of the camera is "where it's at," complaints are constantly heard about Blacks not being fairly depicted or represented.

But, if some aspiring Black journalists would realize that news goes beyond the camera and seek goals to become managers, then maybe some of the so-called "Black" (WQMG) radio stations you listen to would be more than white-owned and managed.

No place like home

By Nannetta Durnell

This past weekend while in Washington D.C., visiting a well-known Black university, it was appalling to see Black students at this great institution strutting the campus grounds as if balancing a book of sophistication upon their heads.

If there was ever a Black preppie college award, Howard University would win. It is understandable that, being in the limelight over a period of time could go to one's head (as the saying goes), but at this institution it has appeared to have gone to their upturned noses.

Why does it seem that visiting college students on Howard's campus are looked down upon the students because they don't attend the university?

Why did a certain campus fraternity treat their visiting frat brothers as unworthy of that brotherly love and recognition?

And can someone tell me where the fashion show is being held?

It is a shame that students handle the success and recognition of their university with high brows while simultaneously living in a disillusioned world of how they think the world views them.

Sure, Howard is known for its doctors, lawyers and scientists that have graduated from its hallowed walls, but A&T also has prominent graduates.

There is nothing wrong with taking pride in one's institution and self, but too much pride eventually becomes arrogance.

A&T students often complain of what they do not have, but there is something that shines above others.

We are surrounded by faculty and students that are willing to interact with one another for the betterment of ourselves individually and as one big family.

Be it ever so humble, there's no place like Ag-gieland.

Stand together as students to survive as a unit

Editor of the Register:

On Feb. 20, I had the opportunity to attend a very inspirational and informative lecture by Dr. Ben Chavis Jr.

The text of his speech was entitled "Black Political Survival in a Time of Conservatism."

There was one point among the many that Chavis made which particularly stood out in my mind.

He said that, with 30 million plus Black Americans in the United States today, there should be no excuse for the status we have put ourselves in politically, socially and, most of all, economically. For, it is the Black man or woman helping each other for a common purpose that we will be able to develop a stronghold on society as it now stands.

A central objective of transformation is needed in society today. By this, I mean Black Americans have to realize that they will always be second-class citizens in a world which is, literally speaking, controlled by the white race.

I cannot understand why Blacks as a people cannot work together without wondering whether or not they will be outclassed by one or more of their own people. The main problem here, I think, is jealousy and until we overcome this mental barrier, we will not make any substantial progress.

Chavis also spoke of the fact that Blacks need a revival. He said he thinks that "a lot of us need to become freedom fighters for justice."

What he is saying is we need to inform others of our situation and develop a plan in which racial imbalances can be dissipated.

Black Americans sometimes forget from whence they came when they obtain some form of power. This is a quality Blacks as a unified people should not want because as I stated earlier it's going to take Blacks helping Blacks to overcome our present-day situation.

In 1983, this is being viewed by the white man as one of the highest points of disorganization ever; and, whenever they see a point where they can step in and make us even more disorganized, they will.

This is why I keep emphasizing and re-emphasizing Black unity.

According to Chavis, racism and imperialism were founded upon the African slave trade. By this he meant all of the unorthodox practices of today originated from the African slave transportation movement.

I feel that was the basic ideal behind the foundation of fraternities, which in the early beginning were survival mechanisms for Black men on college campuses, as sororities were for the women. By this I feel that, as Black college students here at A&T, we should become united as one body in order to reserve the basic foundation of this institution, instead of going in as many directions as the wind blows.

I feel that changing times deserve changing ways. By this I mean we as a group should go to events when they are on campus no matter who is sponsoring them, or what religious denomination they may be.

I close with this simple phrase: "We should stand united as Black college students in order to survive as a unit."

Sincerely,
Elton Maurice Barber,
Crescent 7

Hopkins wrong to decide without consent

To the Student Body:

I would like to bring to your attention an event that took place which should have had your consent or certainly your opinions.

On Feb. 16, the SGA along with R.H. Barringer Jr., a distributor for Anheuser-Busch, held a press conference.

The implications of the press conference were that we, the students as well as the SGA here at A&T, would not participate in the boycotting of Anheuser-Busch which the Rev. Jesse Jackson proposed.

By now, you should see the motive behind my writing this letter.

I personally have not given my opinion, not to mention my consent on this significant decision.

SGA President Bobby Hopkins has better expertise on the economic situation of Black Americans (which was quite evident when he decided to speak for us) than I do. Nevertheless, he has no right to accept the total responsibility of making such an important decision, which affects all of us here and at home.

We shouldn't concern ourselves with what measures to take to refute his decision on the outside, but certainly we should question him as to why he did talk for us on the inside.

I challenge all concerned students to at least be present at all the student body meetings and be more involved in SGA activities, besides the parties.

Incidentally, the SGA along with specific members of the administration will have a student body meeting today discussing this issue.

Take Charge At 22.

In most jobs, at 22 you're near the bottom of the ladder.

In the Navy, at 22 you can be a leader. After just 16 weeks of leadership training, you're an officer. You'll have the kind of job your education and training prepared you for, and the decision-making authority you need to make the most of it.

As a college graduate and officer candidate, your Navy training is geared to making you a leader. There is no boot camp. Instead, you receive professional training to help you build the technical and management skills you'll need as a Navy officer.

This training is designed to instill confidence by first-hand experience. You learn by doing. On your first sea tour, you're responsible for managing the work of up to 30 men and the care of sophisticated equipment worth millions of dollars.

It's a bigger challenge and a lot more responsibility than most corporations give you at 22. The rewards are bigger, too. There's a comprehensive package of benefits, including special duty pay. The starting salary is $17,000—more than most companies would pay you right out of college. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, your salary will have increased to as much as $31,000.

As a Navy officer, you grow through new challenges, new tests of your skills, and new opportunities to advance your education, including the possibility of attending graduate school while you're in the Navy.

Don't just take a job. Become a Navy officer, and take charge. Even at 22.

Spend the summer with The Learning Traveler

How about spending the summer discovering the culture, history and people of exotic Tahiti?

Or studying psychology in China, biology and geology in Galapagos Archipelago, art restoration in Florence, or spend an academic semester at sea visiting 10-12 countries, and possibly earn credit for it?

These are the types of adventure-filled education opportunities you'll find in The Learning Traveler series. The only books of their kind.

Vacation Study Abroad lists about 900 summer foreign study programs sponsored by U.S. colleges and universities and private organizations in every part of the world.

All the programs listed are scheduled to take place between April and October, and last from three days to three months.

And although they are study programs, many include optional time for your own travel and exploration of the host country.

If you'd rather study abroad for a longer period — say a semester or academic-year — The Learning Traveler: U.S. College-Sponsored Programs Abroad: Academic Year is your key to more than 800 semester and academic-year study programs sponsored by accredited U.S. colleges and universities around the world.

Both books, published by the Institute of International Education, list everything you'll need to know about enrolling in a foreign program: when, where and how long the programs are; pre-session orientation, course descriptions including prerequisites, credit, teaching methods, language of instruction, housing, costs; scholarships; work-study and program evaluation.

Although the series is geared toward college students, The Learning Traveler describes many study programs open to high school students and adults of all ages.

The Learning Traveler series is the result of an annual survey conducted by the Institute of International Education.

The 1983 editions, made possible by a grant from Reader's Digest, will be available March 1.

A&T bests WSSU 65-59

A&T executed its inside attack Monday night, defeating the Winston-Salem State University Rams 69-59 in Corbett Sports Center.

As usual, these rivals battled a close, intense game through most of the way. But, the play of 6-foot-9 center Juan Lanauze proved the difference for the Aggies.

Lanauze, one of three Aggies to score in double figures, led all scorers with 22 points, hitting 9 of 10 field goal attempts and grabbing a game-high 12 rebounds. He also blocked three shots.

A&T led the game throughout most of the contest, going into the lockerroom at halftime with a 34-23 lead. A&T shot 48.1 percent while WSSU hit a dismal 28.1 percent from the floor.

In the second half, A&T dominated the inside game and didn't have much of a problem controlling the game until committing several turnovers to bring WSSU within four points with 6:25 left in the game, 46-42. But, A&T held on to the lead and put the game out of reach on an alley-oop slam dunk by Lanauze with 45 seconds remaining.

For A&T, 18-7, forward Joe Binion tallied 17 points, and guard Eric Boyd added 16 to round out double figure scores for the Aggies.

The loss dropped WSSU to 13-11 overall. They were paced by James Mitchell with 16 points.

MEAC Players of the Week

Joe Binion of A&T was the MEAC Player of the Week last week after leading the Aggies to conference victories over Maryland Eastern Shore (87-73), and Florida A&M (94-67).

He also played well in the 88-76 loss to Virginia Tech.

Against UMES, Binion scored 34 points and had 15 rebounds, and tallied 26 points and 13 rebounds against FAMU.

In the Virginia Tech loss, he scored 22 points and secured 14 rebounds. For his three-game-82-point performance, Binion hit 31 of 58 field goals and 20 of 26 free throws. He averaged 14 rebounds for the week.

Binion, last season's MEAC Player of the year, is a 6-8 junior forward from Rochester, N.Y.

To top off the week, he added seven assists, four blocked shots, and three steals.

Lora Smith of A&T was named the MEAC Women's Player of the Week for her play in conference wins over UMES (67-49), and FAMU (78-65).

In the two games, she scored a total of 40 points and pulled down 26 rebounds.

Smith connected on 17 of 18 free throws in the 29-point showing against FAMU.

Smith is a 5-10 sophomore forward from Winston-Salem.

Forte signs 17 to letters of intent

It was his first full-scale recruiting effort as A&T's football coach and Mo Forte is calling it an enormous success.

Forte and his staff signed 17 high school seniors to letters of intent on Feb. 9, the national signing date.

Forte and his staff concentrated heavily on lineman, an area which had serious shortcomings and helped contribute to the team's lackluster 2-8 record in Forte's maiden campaign last season.

"I'm real pleased with our recruiting effort," Forte said. "It was our main goal to bring top-flight prospects to our program at A&T."

"And we made a serious bid to get some local talent. We were only slightly successful in that aim since we signed only one player from Guilford County. But in no way should that be regarded as a measure of the total effort."

"Overall, I'm real pleased with the group of newcomers. But we're going to continue to recruit heavily in our own back yard because we know it's one of the keys to a successful program."

From a geographical standpoint, Forte and his staff signed eight prospects from North Carolina, three from South Carolina, two each from Virginia and Georgia and one each from Michigan and Washington, D.C.

Of the 17 prospects, 10 will play on either the offensive or defensive lines as an Aggie. The biggest signee is 6-4, 275-pound Greg Harris of Norfolk Catholic of Norfolk, Va.

Harris, who earned a number of awards as an interior lineman at Norfolk Catholic, is typical of the new crop of recruits. He is big, quick and a hard-nosed player.

"It's too early to tell because a number of things has to fall into place, but we're looking for many of these players to make a contribution as early as next season," Forte said.

Also listed as future lineman at A&T are 6-5, 260-pound Brian Vick of North Hampton of Garrysburg, and teammate Gilbert Squire (6-4, 250), Danville, Va.'s Charles Poteat (6-4, 255) and Ken Canion (6-3, 240) of Therrell High School of Atlanta.

The Aggies have their two leading rushers returning, but to complement the running corps Forte recruited 6-2, 235 pound Robert Shievers of North Augusta, S.C. and Demoriss Tucker, a 6-2 and 185 pound speedster from Fayetteville's Seventy-First.

"With this kind of recruits, I think it's a positive step in the right direction," Forte said.

Adjusting's easy for Joe Lopez

By CORNELL BROWN
Special to the Register

It's not always easy for an athlete to keep his priorities tuned up in a productive manner, spending three and sometimes as many as five nights a week in hotels around the world.

The task becomes even more difficult when a player thinks he can contribute more to the team than in the few opportunities awarded to him by his coach.

It's a tough transition to make when you earn a berth in the starting rotation as a freshman only to be confined to spot duty as a sixth man the subsequent three years.

Adjusting isn't always the easiest thing for a player whose credentials were impressive entering A&T.

Joe Lopez, a 6-foot-7 center, has played against many household names including Larry Bird of the NBA's Boston Celtics and Jay Johnstone, formerly of Wake Forest who now plays professionally.

He's also battled former Rutgers standouts James Bailey and Roy Hinson and Villanova's John Pinone.

"I do feel disappointed that I haven't seen a lot of playing time in my four years," he said. "I've adjusted well to Coach's philosophy and I have accepted my role as a sixth man. I also enjoy it because I've been playing more."

Lopez brings these statements from his coach: "Lopez is a well-mannered player who plays well and has accepted his role playing behind Juan Lanauze," said

Lopez

Don Corbett. "He has the attitude that I want all of my players to have. Lopez has never complained and he'll surely be missed next season."

Lopez was recruited four years ago by former A&T coach Gene Littles who now is an assistant coach with the Cleveland Cavaliers of the NBA. Littles saw Lopez give his team fits while they were in West Africa participating in an international invitational tournament.

He was so impressed with him that he brought the Dakar, Senegal, native to play for him in Greensboro.

"I decided to come here because I had heard a lot about the school and I felt that the competition was better in the United States," said Lopez, an economics major.

"I wanted to come over and try my skills against more competitive players," he said.

Lopez has represented his country in university games and the World Basketball championship. He will also be one of his country's representatives in the 1983 university game to be held this summer in Canada.

Although underrated as a player because of his height, Lopez is one of the most experienced members of this year's team. He is the only senior who garners any noticeable amount of playing time.

Lopez, when not on the court, enjoys "swimming, playing racquet ball, reading and conversing with my roommate and teammate, Tony Glover."

"I don't have much of a social life because I concentrate a lot on academics," he said.

"When I do (socialize) I keep it pretty much personal."

So many athletes today concentrate solely on athletics and lose sight of the fact that there are things more important. Lopez is not caught up in this fantasy world.

"I want to go to Syracuse and receive my masters degree in business administration," he said. "Then I'll go back to my country and work for the government.

"The states has its good and bad points, but there's no place like home."

Lopez is a man who has always had control of himself on the basketball court. After this year he will attempt to have control of his life away from the dribbling of a ball.

"I've enjoyed my years at A&T," he said.

You've been trying to get to know her better since the beginning of the term. And when she mentioned how hard it is to study in the dorm, you said, "My place is nice and quiet. Come on over and study with me."

Your roommates weren't very happy about it. But after a little persuading they decided the double feature at the Bijou might be worth seeing.

They're pretty special friends. And they deserve a special "Thanks!" So, tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.
