ENGINEERING STUDENTS WIN BIG AT REGIONALS

Students from A&T's theatre department (left) discuss performance techniques with students from Page High School during their visit to the school on Feb. 19. They also performed scenes from "A Raise in the Sun," which they will present starting Feb. 19.

Select members of the theatre department and cast members of an upcoming production get away from the familiar confines of the stage and for a few hours on Monday to work with and shadow their counterparts at Page High School.

The visit was part of the Local Theatre In Education program. After the troupe arrived, Adrain and went through warm-ups, the A&T crew acted out three scenes from "A Raise in the Sun." The play opens at A&T's Paul Ferguson Theatre on Feb. 19.

The A&T actors paused between each scene to give the high school students a chance to ask questions and discuss the details of the play. Damien Lee, a member of the A&T cast, said the workshop portion of the visit was beneficial to the Page students.

"I'm glad to be helping the kids," Lee said. "It gives them a better insight into the play."

Michael Paris, the advisor to the "Page Playmakers," said he was pleased to see the two schools interacting and learning from each other.

"It was interesting. We do some of the same things, we just have different names for them," Paris said. "Our folks were teaching them and they were teaching our kids.

After the A&T students went through the scenes from "A Raise in the Sun," they took questions from the Page students about performing on the college level and acting as a career. Next, some of the Playmakers read Langston Hughes' poem "A Drum夢t Discarded" and had their performances critiqued by the A&T delegation.

Towards the end of the session, the Page Playmakers got a special bonus -- discounted tickets to see "A Raisin in the Sun," good from Feb 19 until Feb 24.

Tuition decrease

By CHAD ROBERTS
Editor-in-Chief

A&T students may get a reprieve from rising tuition costs for a year, depending on the outcome of a Feb. 16 Board of Trustees meeting. Chancellor James Renick, who was appointed last year, may explore the possibility of escalating tuition to the new cost of living.

One of the motivating factors, according to Vice President Ellis, is the school's desire for business and financial viability. The uncertainty of financial aid and the lack of state financial aid is a concern.

"We have to weigh the importance of funding a high quality education with students' parents' ability to pay," Renick said.

Another factor is the rising cost of living. If passed, the proposal would increase the tuition rates for 2006.

Aid office goes high-tech to protect student identity

The Financial Aid Department is now using a mobile numeric keypad designed for laptops by Lotus Systems, which will enable students to access their personal information without inputting it on the computer.

"We felt that students and employees could be subject to identity theft and that there is a lot of pressure to use the keypad," said Lowell Reason. The keypad is used after Feb 19 and it took about ten minutes to install on the computers. When it comes to the students' accounts, Gothard says "They appreciate us even considering keeping their information private."

What makes a student leader

There's been a lot of talk about leadership on this campus. This year has seen the rise of student participation in productive ways, as the USCA, SIBA, FRANK, and COP have all sponsored programs and collaborative projects. This year has seen the most open forums ever, where everyone, including leadership, is free to start everything. About Homeroom was extraordinary, and each Fraternity/Sorority is pulling its weight as leaders.

Communication is done by our students all over the campus, but they say not everyone is listening, or doing their part. Every leader should be a testament to the capabilities of the student leadership on campus. There are names for those who try to control the way people think. They are called extremists, tygers, dictators, and censors. In this case, "tyger" would be the appropriate word. The administrator failed to look at this issue when an outsider saw a student be critical of the administration, faculty, staff, or other students. They might be most impressed by the environment of free speech that the campus has, which means that the disgruntled student is commenting about. Students complain all the time. True, a student who is may be curious as to what the complaint is, but they may also be unaware of who that is that is totally different and unlikely to change because of what somebody wrote in an article. And what about the student who the paper is partly supported by student money. Students are creating a newspaper, but thanks to a paper that the paper by itself is not RELEVANT, some got chided.

What ever student leaders the article on question is about and why, they are quite capable of defending themselves, and do not need an administrator to keep them from their roles. The fact that A&T was the host school for the successful conference, and not just a participant, should be a testament to the capabilities of the student leadership on campus. Full-time administrator, part-time paper thief

A stack of newspapers vanishes. It was not an act of magic, but administrative heavy-handedness. During the first week of February, while A&T was hosting the BHRCSA conference, an entire rack of The A&T Register student newspaper mysteriously vanished from the student union. By one student, they were "magic" behind the disappearance - the papers were stolen.

According to this source, an administrator (who for the time being shall remain nameless) ordered a maintenance worker to remove the papers and hide them because of a previous article that was critical of student leadership on A&T's campus. The administrator’s reasoning, according to another student who was in the area during the incident, was that he did not want students from other HBCUs to see A&T leadership portrayed in a negative light in the student newspaper. Bucky Pride...WHAT?!

An administrator can come to the defense of a student in most situations, and the agreement is that if a student is having problems with campus police, can’t get along with a professor, or is having difficulty with the housing or financial aid processes, but this administrator’s action was not justifiable under any circumstance. It was unprofessional, unfair, unreasonable, and unethical for you to insert your own name here. This was a case of an administrator meddling.

Whatever student leaders the article on question is about and why, they are quite capable of defending themselves, and do not need an administrator to keep them from their roles. The fact that A&T was the host school for the successful conference, and not just a participant, should be a testament to the capabilities of the student leadership on campus. Relationships and Respect are Back! It’s easy to see if you have a girlfriend. I know that most of our friends are more concerned with who they can get, or how many girls they have dating, or their phone. But make no mistake, it is really easy to have a man. It is to sit and just not care one bit that you understand. It is to sit here and worry about lying about what you did. It is to sit here and worry about what you did. Maybe it is just because it is getting cold, not even in fact you can see that a lot of people are in relationships. It is a perfect example of how although the media portrays us a people that do not respect each other and cannot be in committed relationships, in actuality we are doing just the opposite. There is nothing wrong with opening doors for women when you are at a function, and helping them pick up with her coat. There is nothing wrong with getting out of bed for students leaders, but they have no more seats available and allow a female to sit in your chair. That is your problem after all. There is nothing wrong with respecting females and males equally. We all have our own (as they respect themselves). There is nothing wrong with treating women like women and not like girls (as long as they are a woman). Respecting women and treating them is not dead; we just forget now how to do it. Oh it is our fault. It did fall out of style for a while, but it is on its way back. You can see it all around campus. A woman has (had) respect and other women, and you could not find another woman who could not respect you. But also, we have our own ways too. When you first do it, but after awhile it will become second nature. After awhile, men and women will look at you differently, and you will be seen as a role model; someone for them to look up to. You will begin to think about yourself, and respect yourself. You will begin to respect yourself and the people around you. If you are not respectful, then it is courtesy to extended to someone else because you know how you would feel if it was you. It is a challenge to build this community; our personal lives are living.

Thank you. Small start. Grow up your article when you see a young lady cold. Give them the respect even when you are allergic. Maybe we can start making changes so the ladies will stop seeing there’s not a good man around. You should try it. It is not as hard as it seems.

Lucky Jeans

BY CANDRA WHITLEY Contributor

Ladies, buying jeans can be a daunting task. Not only do you have to sort through dozens of styles, but you also have to find a fit that's comfortable and looks great with your particular body.

When the flatter-factor varies greatly from cut to cut and brand to brand, there are a few basic steps to keep in mind when shopping for jeans.

1. Go for a straight or boot cut leg. These legs fall straight from the hip to the hem. A boot cut flares slightly. Both cuts are extremely flattering to any body type, but keep in mind your body type when you look taller and slimmer.

Avoid: tapered legs, an indented crotch, and reverse bootcut jeans. These legs are a great fit for women who want to emphasize their waist.

2. Stick to a dark wash.

Bootcut jeans are slimming wash.

Dark denim jeans always look polished and are most flattering.

3. Try a low waist.

In the past few years, waistbands have been strategically lowered. If you're looking for a ultra-low waist, this is a great look. Women who want to emphasize their waist and look taller should take note. They are also flattering to a range of all body types.

4. Add some stretch.

Jeans with some stretch are the perfect go-to item. They are flattering because they hug your body. Dark denim jeans always look polished and are most flattering.

Dark rinse: If your preferred denim style is a dark-wash denim, you can still look skinny. Big huggin’ styles are also great for you. You can also break the illusion of having a longer torso. A low-rise frame on the waist with a longer leg will also help.

If you are very slim then you need with straight leg jeans or boot cut jeans. They are comfortable. If you are curvy then those lips are flare legged work the best. They help to balance your hips with the rest of your body.

Also look for pants with large back pockets. These pockets will add chic to your look, and they are flattering. If you have a longer torso, you also need to make your waist look more narrow.

These days pants are becoming appropriate, and they are a great addition to your wardrobe.

Many people don’t realize that there are so many different types of jeans.

For example, there are skinny jeans, bootcut jeans, and more. Each type is designed to fit a specific body type.

The key is to find the right pair that flatters your body and makes you feel confident.

Marketing Reps bring the S. Carter Collection to NC A&T SU

By KAREN PETERS and EMERIE JOHNSON COOPER Contributor

The S. Carter BCUSI marketing initiative has brought Emerie S. Carter Collection to North Carolina A&T State University.

North Carolina A&T was one of the six colleges selected to be apart of the S. Carter BCUSI Marketing Representative Initiative. The initiative includes two A&T alumni, Karen Peters and senior marketing major Emerie Johnson Cooper, who serve as S. Carter College Marketing Representatives.

As part of the S. Carter marketing team, the marketing reps will sponsor diverse campus events in order to promote S. Carter brand awareness throughout North Carolina A&T. Through this initiative, S. Carter is working to grow its reach in the college market, increase its consumer audience and build its target market awareness.

In June 2003, Emerie’s booties hit the market, helping to bring the S. Carter Prize Pack.

Children’s book translates the moments in to kids

TOM STIGSON

More than forty years ago main children from local schools challenged the Jim Crow laws by arranging sit-ins that led to a student movement in the South.

Freedom on the Menu: The Greensboro Sit-ins, a new children’s book by Fayetteville State University Professor Barton Bloodworth introduces young readers to an important movement in history.

Wealthoff’s latest release, Freedom on the Menu: The Greensboro Sit-ins, is a fictional story inspired by actual events. The story’s main character, Corrine, is a little girl who comes to the lunch counter at the Woolworth’s whistle-stop counter. Her parents and older sisters join in the sit-in, and Corrine watches and watches as history is made.

The sit-in, which took place in Greensboro, is the true story of how four student activists defied a lunch counter segregaterr. The book has sold 133 of the 125 copies made. The second printing will also be available for sale.

The book is available for pre-sale through the A&T Bookstore.
