Former Russian PM Yeltsin dead

By Natalia Neveleva
McClatchy Newspapers

MOSCOW—Boris Yeltsin, Russia’s first democratically elected leader (1991-1999), has died at the age of 76 of cardiac arrest.

Yeltsin was born in Svetlogorsk, now Vyatka Oblast, in 1931 and raised at the local Ural Polytechnic Institute. Yeltsin began his career in the construction business (1953-1968). He joined the Communist Party in 1959 and served as a deputy construction representative in the Soviet Union's Supreme Soviet from 1966 to 1986. In 1987, Yeltsin was elected to the Supreme Soviet Parliament, was named Russian prime minister, and resigned from the Communist Party. He returned the presidency in the popular election in 1991, when he became Russia’s first democratically elected president and Gorbachev’s main liberal opponent. In August 1991, Yeltsin led the resistance to the coup by Communist hardliners, when Gorbachev was detained at his country house. The success of opposition to the coup shifted power to Yeltsin. In December 1991, he helped found the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) parliament and the Russian government. In 1992, Yeltsin helped end attempts to preserve the Soviet Union. Yeltsin resigned as president December 25.

In September 1993, Yeltsin issued a decree to dissolve the Supreme Soviet and hold parliamentary elections. A month later, he ordered the armed suppression of a coup by former Supreme Soviet members led by Vice President Alexander Rutskoi. As president, Yeltsin moved to end state control of the economy and oversaw sweeping privatization deals, which brought fortune to a handful of Kravtsov-connected businessmen. The economic and political opposition showed the results.

In 1994, Yeltsin ordered the suppression of the activity of Boris Yeltsin’s opposition regime in Chechnya. The military campaign in the breakaway republic ended in September 1996 when Russia withdrew all its troops from the republic, thereby, de facto granting Chechnya independence.

In June 1998, he ran for the presidency again and defeated his main opponent, former President Gorbachev. In the run-off election in July.

In November 1996, Yeltsin launched a new Russia party and appeared in the presidential race in 2000. Despite the defeat by a series of economic crises and corruption charges, Yeltsin did not stop. On New Year’s Eve in 1999, Yeltsin surprised the nation by announcing his resignation and handing the presidency to his deputy Vladimir Putin using presid- ence.

In 2000, he was succeeded by his wife, daughter, son-in-law, and great-grandchildren.
Replacing Radio Hosts Isn’t Easy

Controversy Is King
In Limited Medium; Fallen Rise Again

By Yen OLIVETTI

In the heyday of radio, back when listeners stayed home at night to hear their favorite shows, the medium was dominated by a few big names. The biggest of these was Orson Welles, who hosted "The Shadow" and "The War of the Worlds," and was known for his dramatic readings and intuitive acting. Welles' shows were so popular that they were broadcast on both NBC and CBS in the 1930s and 1940s.

In recent years, however, the radio industry has struggled to attract new listeners and maintain old ones. With the rise of streaming services and podcasts, many stations have had to adapt to a new landscape. This has led to a number of shake-ups in the industry, as stations try to find new ways to attract and retain listeners.

One such shake-up is the firing of Howard Stern, who was the top-rated radio host in the United States for many years. Stern was known for his controversial shows, which often drew outrage from both listeners and advertisers. But despite his success, Stern was eventually fired from his show on the now-defunct Howard Stern Show, which was a popular staple of Fox Broadcasting.

The firing of Stern was just one example of the many changes that have taken place in the radio industry in recent years. As the medium continues to evolve, it will be interesting to see how stations continue to adapt and find new ways to connect with listeners.

Carpenter, the head of the Sunny Home Improvement Company in Winston-Salem, has admitted that skills taught from his father allowed him to become a successful entrepreneur.

Born in Winston-Salem, Carpenter’s father taught him many skills in carpentry and how to work with wood. As a young child, he would often watch his father work in the evenings. When he was young, Carpenter would spend hours building small commercial projects for his father and, while attending Conway High School, Carpenter would build homes with his father after school and during the weekends.

“Carpenter would lend a hand from time to time architecting an iron beam,” explained his father. “The son of a carpenter in Winston-Salem, Carpenter was a true entreprene-

Carpenter went on to involve himself in many business ventures, including local computer stores and record stores, throughout the city.

In 1983, he began to explore business opportunities in the growing tech industry. He started buying and selling homes, and then, building and marketing them for profit.

Carpenter sees, as rests in building a 3-button phone in Winston-Salem, and he’s also a sector-4 executive.

He used the skills his father taught him early in life which allowed him to repair most of his bike and express by employing himself to work on the houses and also hire inde-

The reasons why he decided to go into business for himself was to pursue his own goals and dreams.

After ten years of real estate investing, Carpenter has been able to turn his hobby and passion for investing into a successful business. His latest venture is landscape and painting homes. Carpenter believes that his skills in his field of expertise are what will help him succeed in this new venture.

In the next five years, Carpenter plans on trying to do some “tracking” in his town. He has recently accumulated some space in his town.

“I’ll never stop looking for business,” said Carpenter. “I want to make sure my business can take advantage of technology and continue to grow.”

The Most Important Part of Running a Business

The key to running a successful business is maintaining a stable cash flow. This includes managing expenses, investing in technology, and being able to adapt to changes in the market.

In response to this question, Carpenter stated, “The most important part of running a business is maintaining a stable cash flow. It’s important to have a steady income and be able to adapt to changes in the market.”

Carpenter’s advice to young entrepreneurs is to be persistent and not to give up. He believes that many young people have already been through the same experiences and know what it takes to succeed.

He advises young people to always be prepared for change. He believes that many young people will develop knowledge and be able to learn new things and new skills.

“In order to be successful, you need to be persistent and not give up. You need to keep learning and be open to new experiences.”

Carpenter believes that “just doing the same thing over and over every day” is key to his success. After ten years of real estate investing, Carpenter has been able to turn his hobby and passion for investing into a successful business. His latest venture is landscape and painting homes. Carpenter believes that his skills in his field of expertise are what will help him succeed in this new venture.

From the viewpoint of others, I've had a fantastic time working on this.
NFL Draft Preview
Talent vs. Character: Teams have to decide which is more important

Alan Schmalzle
The Orlando Sentinel

Digging up dirt on people hardly is a new concept. The quest is what it is about.

In the NFL, some answers are coming soon. The NFL stage-es its annual draft next Saturday and Sunday. Some of the same questions that excite coaches and scouting directors are raised for the first time.

Manti Te’o, the senior linebacker from Notre Dame, is equally intriguing as he is head-scratching.

But the biggest question the NFL has been posing is how bad are the NFL’s stars? Have they been good or bad?

But the league’s most prominent teams
have not been involved in the good or bad
actions.

So, what are the highlights?

The draft is the time of the year when many of these questions will be answered. It’s also the time when teams will get the chance to attack their fans in their publications.

Miami safety Brandon Meri-weather, who was a central fig-er in an ugly AI with Florida International last season, is a key player to watch. So is California linebacker Manti Lynch, arrested on domestic-violence charges in December but not charged. And there’s Florida defensive tackle Aaron Jones, who was suspended in November because of positive drug test.

Last week, three more highly ranked prospects publicly entered the mix when it was revealed that Georgia Tech wide resceiver Calvin Johnson, Clemson defensive and France Adams and Louisville defensive output Anthony Obore quit smoking marijuana while in college. All three are considered early first-round picks.

This year’s group of pro-table prospects provides one for the NFL to enter the league in the wake of Goodell’s embellishing up of the league’s personal-contact codes. Is this the year personal personwants more than just show?

Is the draft where teams really do pay attention to draft prospects?

“You know talented players. You know the pros and cons of the process,” one team official said. “It’s not just your girlfriend, how do you talk to you?

NCAA coaches and even the league had an advantage probably never will be diminished, but how much will teams want to talk?

And much heat in the connection will be to turn?

One interior line prospect in NFL front offices, Profootball-Wire.com, has Monday’s evaluation based on off-field scoutings. "Hard Knocks" is now a site staple. The NFL’s deal with its players.
